CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIFTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 1, 1902.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the second session of the Fifty-seventh Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. WILLIAM P. FRYE, a Senator from the State of Maine) took the chair and called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, at the threshold of the solemn duties of this time and place we bow reverently before Thee and lift up our hearts to Thy throne. As the representatives of the nation we make humble acknowledgment of our sense of gratitude to Thee for Thy marvelous goodness to us. Thou hast kept us in the hollow of Thy hand. The generous earth has yielded the fruits in their season; the elements have been kind; the people enjoy domestic tranquillity; peace abounds. In all that gives meaning to life, in all that inspires hope, in all that establishes government, and in all that gives dignity to office and honor to authority, we recognize Thy purpose in us as a chosen people.

Now we pray that Thou wouldst look upon us in Thy mercy. Grant that more and more we may be conscious of the Divine guidance. We pray that where authority is exercised it may be by Thy consent; where counsel is taken it may be under Thine own direction; where power is used it may be chastened and sanctified by Thy grace.

Let Thy blessings be upon Thy servants in this honorable Senate. Give to them a sense of the Divine power. Rule through them in the execution of Thine own righteous will. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

SENATORS PRESENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, 70 Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present, and the Senate is ready for the transaction of business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLATT of Connecticut and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

DEATH OF SENATOR JAMES M'MILLAN.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, it becomes my painful duty to formally announce to the Senate the death of my esteemed colleague, the Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN. He took leave of this life on the 10th day of August last, from his summer residence by the sea, at Manchester, Mass., where he had repaired at the close of the last session of Congress for rest and recuperation.

AUTHENTICATED U.S. GOVERNMENT INFORMATION GPO

His death was as sudden as it was unexpected. Only the day previous he was in usual health and spirits, participating in the sports of the field, to which he was devoted. But a sudden indisposition reminded him of the enfeebled condition of his heart, which had existed for some years, and admonished him to desist from further physical exertion. Retiring to his residence, with rest and medical assistance, he soon recovered his normal condition and spent the evening with his family and friends in that delightful social intercourse which gave such a charm to his home life. Later in the evening, however, there came a recurrence of the disorder so serious and persistent as to baffle the skill of physicians, and at 4 o'clock on the Sabbath morning of August 10 "the silver cord was loosed" and his spirit freed.

In his death the State of Michigan has suffered an irreparable loss, and the Senate will miss a wise counselor and painstaking legislator. But I am aware, Mr. President, that this is not the time for eulogy. On some future occasion I hope for the opportunity to pay, with other Senators, a fitting tribute to his memory. For the present I offer the following resolutions, and I ask their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan offers resolutions, which will be read to the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 2, 1902, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 1, 1902.

This being the day fixed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the House of Representatives of the Fifty-seventh Congress met in its Hall at 12 o'clock m. for the second regular session; and was called to order by the Speaker, Hon. DAVID B. HENDERSON, a Representative from the State of Iowa.

Prayer was offered as follows by the Chaplain of the House, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.:

Infinite and Eternal Spirit, God, our Heavenly Father, we approach Thee with profound gratitude and unfeigned love, mindful of that overruling Providence which has shaped and guided the progress of our nation through all the shifting scenes and vicissitudes of the past; and we most fervently pray that Thou wilt continue to uphold and protect us, that our sacred institutions may be preserved unsullied to all generations, that the emblem of liberty and Union may float on in triumph forever, that the coming of Thy kingdom may be hastened in all the earth. To this end let Thy blessing descend in full measure upon our President and his advisers, the Congress now convened, and upon the judicial department, that in all these branches Thy will may be done and righteousness, peace, and prosperity prevail, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name.

And now, O God, quicken by Thy spirit the mind and heart of him who presides over this body, that with unbiased judgment he may rule with justice and equity, and inspire each member with patriotic zeal and religious fervor that he may "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's and unto God the things that are God's."

With our hearts deeply touched by the vacant seats, we fervently pray for the colleagues, friends, and families left desolate, that Thy comforting arms may be about them, that the star of hope may shine in their hearts and enable them to look beyond the veil, where in brighter realms they shall meet their loved ones to dwell forever in their presence. And thine be the praise and the glory. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

RESIGNATIONS OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House resignations of members of the House; which were read, as follows:

NORWICH, N. Y., September 25, 1902.

To the governor and to the secretary of state of New York; and also to the Speaker and Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States of America:

I have resigned and hereby do resign my position and office as Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress of the United States in and for the Twenty-sixth Congressional district of the State of New York.

Most respectfully,

GEO. W. RAY,
As Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress of the United States in and for the Twenty-sixth Congressional District of the State of New York.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, November 29, 1902.

Hon. DAVID B. HENDERSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I hereby resign as a member of the House of Representatives in the Fifty-seventh Congress of the United States.

Very respectfully,

J. K. P. HALL,
Twenty-eighth District of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. These resignations will be entered on the Journal.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Also—

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The message also announced that, in compliance with the foregoing, the President pro tempore had appointed as said committee Mr. PLATT of Connecticut and Mr. JONES of Arkansas.

The message further announced the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS-ELECT.

The SPEAKER. Any members present with credentials, who have not been sworn in, will step forward, and their credentials will be read.

The credentials of Hon. Frank B. Brandegee, member-elect from the Third Congressional district of Connecticut; of Hon. James J. Butler, member-elect from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri; of Hon. Alexander Billmeyer, member-elect from the Seventeenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; of Hon. Augustus P. Gardner, member-elect from the Sixth Congressional district of Massachusetts, and of Hon. Carter Glass, member-elect from the Sixth Congressional district of Virginia, were read; and thereupon Mr. Brandegee, Mr. Butler of Missouri; Mr. Billmeyer, Mr. Gardner of Massachusetts, and Mr. Glass were duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, at the last general election in the State of New York, Mr. John W. Dwight was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. George W. Ray, from the Twenty-sixth district of New York. There is no question about the election of Mr. Dwight by a large majority; but under our laws the State canvassers have not yet met, and Mr. Dwight has not yet his certificate of election. Under the circumstances I ask unanimous consent that he now be sworn in as a member. I understand that there are other gentlemen in behalf of whom a similar request is to be made.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to state that there is no contest in this case.

Mr. PAYNE. There is no contest or controversy over the election.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I believe there is another gentleman from New York to be sworn in under similar circumstances—the gentleman elected to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Amos J. Cummings.

Mr. PAYNE. If that gentleman is present—I do not know whether he is or not—I request that he also be sworn in.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I am informed that he is not here now.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, at a special election held November 4, Hon. J. G. Russell was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. R. C. De Graffenreid, and on the 15th of November a special election was held to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. John L. Sheppard, and Hon. Morris Sheppard was elected to fill that vacancy. Under our law the certificates of election have not yet been issued by the governor of Texas. There is no question, however, that the two gentlemen named have been elected. There is no contest in either case, and I am informed the governor of my State has telegraphed the Speaker of this House to the effect that these gentlemen have been elected to fill the respective vacancies. I therefore ask unanimous consent that these two gentlemen, Mr. Sheppard and Mr. Russell, be now sworn in as members of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Before submitting the request for unanimous consent the Chair will ask to have read a telegram received from Governor Sayers, of Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

AUSTIN, TEX., November 30, 1902.

The Hon. SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.:

Entirely reliable information reaches me that at an election regularly held, Morris Sheppard, a citizen of Bowie County, Tex., has been elected to succeed John L. Sheppard, who was a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Fourth Congressional district of Texas, and is now deceased, and that J. G. Russell, a citizen of Smith County, Tex., has been elected to succeed R. C. De Graffenreid, who was a Representative in said Congress from the Third Congressional district, and is now deceased. Both gentlemen received large majorities in their respective districts, and there is no contest pending as to either. Under the law of this State official returns of the election can not be opened and counted until after the expiration of forty days from the date of the election.

JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
Governor of Texas.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection these two requests—that of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]—will be submitted at one time. [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection. Is there objection to the swearing in of Mr. Dwight of New York and Mr. Russell and Mr. Sheppard of Texas? [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The gentlemen will step forward and take the oath of office.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Russell is not now present; he will be here, I understand, to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. He will be sworn in when he appears.

Mr. John W. Dwight, a member-elect from the Twenty-sixth district of New York, and Mr. Morris Sheppard, a member-elect from the Fourth district of Texas, were duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

CARTER GLASS.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the credentials this day presented by Carter Glass, esq., as Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Sixth district of Virginia be, and they are hereby, referred to Committee on Elections No. 1, with direction to inquire and report with all convenient speed, whether they are based upon returns of a lawful election for members of Congress, held in Virginia, November 4, 1902, and upon what character of registration lists, and under color of what constitution or ordinances said election was held; and whether at said election the right of franchise was accorded to all citizens of Virginia alike, without regard to race or color; and whether any citizens of the United States who were entitled to vote for members of Congress at said election were, under color of any constitution, law, statute, or ordinance, unlawfully deprived of their rights, privileges, and immunities secured to them under the Constitution and laws.

Resolved, That said committee be empowered to hold its sessions at such times and places in or out of the State of Virginia as to it may seem best, and to summon before it and examine any and all persons and papers which it may deem necessary to the investigation hereby provided for, and to employ such stenographers and clerks as may be necessary to perform its business; and the expenses of such inquiry and investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the voucher of the chairman of said committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order. This is not a privileged resolution and must be referred under the rule.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would state that I ask no action on this resolution, but that it be referred to Elections Committee No. 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio states that he asks no action on this resolution, except that it be referred to Elections Committee No. 1. The gentleman from Tennessee states that he desires to make a point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It should go to the committee.

The SPEAKER. This will be referred to Elections Committee No. 1, without objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask to what committee the resolution is to be referred?

The SPEAKER. Elections Committee No. 1.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not know that there is any advantage sought to be obtained by this reference, but I am informed that Virginia contests went to some other committee. They went to Committee No. 3, as I am informed.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the Committee on Elections No. 1 will only consider the propriety of the adoption of this resolution, and if there is any intimation from the other side of a desire that the resolution should go to another committee it will be so referred.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is no objection to its going to Committee No. 1, as I am informed.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolution, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

The Chair announced the following gentlemen as members of said committee:

Mr. BINGHAM of Pennsylvania, Mr. HITT of Illinois, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution agreed to.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the hour of daily meeting of the House of Representatives shall be 12 o'clock meridian.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FLANAGAN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. NEVILLE, for twenty days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HAMILTON, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. MORRELL, for one hour, on account of death of friends.

To Mr. GLENN, for three days, on account of illness.

To Mr. KLEBERG, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. KAHN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. KNOX, for one week, on account of important business.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE CHARLES A. RUSSELL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce to the House the death of my predecessor, Hon. CHARLES ADDISON RUSSELL, of Killingly, Conn. He died at his home on the 23d day of October, 1902. I do not at this time desire to enter upon any extended remarks upon that most unfortunate event. At some future time I shall ask the House to name a day when proper and customary tribute of respect to his memory may be paid.

At this time, as supplementing what I have said, I offer the following resolutions, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of Hon. CHARLES A. RUSSELL, late a Representative from the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect, the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The question was taken; and the resolutions were agreed to.

Accordingly, in pursuance of the resolution, at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, transmitting a detailed statement of the expenditures of the Smithsonian Institution under certain appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1902—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Civil Service Commissioners, transmitting a response to the inquiry of the House in relation to the appointment to office of persons who have ranked No. 1 in civil-service examinations—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a recommendation for a new relief light-vessel in the Third light-house district—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, relating to the selection of a site for a light-house on the ledges called "The Graves," in Boston Harbor—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, transmitting a list of the property in his charge on December 1, 1902—to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, transmitting an account of the receipts and disbursements of his office—to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the expenditures of the contingent fund of his Department—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 2, 1902.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

MOSES E. CLAPP, a Senator from the State of Minnesota; JOSEPH SIMON, a Senator from the State of Oregon, and JOHN C. SPOONER, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, as a privileged matter, I present a certificate from the executive of the State of Michigan, appointing Russell A. Alger to fill the vacancy existing in that State. I ask that the credentials be read and that the oath of office be administered to Mr. Alger.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be received and read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the credentials of Russell A. Alger, appointed by the governor of the State of Michigan a Senator from that State to fill, until the next meeting of the legislature thereof, the vacancy caused by the death of James McMillan in the term ending March 3, 1907.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be placed on file, and, if there be no objection, the Senator appointed will present himself at the desk and take the oath required by law.

Mr. Alger was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. BURROWS, and, the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar of the Senate and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

I am further directed to inform the Senate that the House has passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House, to join the committee appointed by the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make.

I am also directed to inform the Senate that the Speaker has appointed Mr. BINGHAM of Pennsylvania, Mr. HITT of Illinois, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee as the committee on the part of the House.

I am further directed to communicate to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. CHARLES A. RUSSELL, late a Representative from the State of Connecticut, and to transmit resolutions of the House thereon.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut and Mr. JONES of Arkansas, the committee appointed in conjunction with a similar committee of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared below the bar, and

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut said: Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to join with a like committee on the part of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of each House of Congress is now in session and ready to receive any communication he wishes to make, have performed that duty and were advised by the President that he would communicate with Congress in writing immediately.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the Secretary and handed to the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

We still continue in a period of unbounded prosperity. This prosperity is not the creature of law, but undoubtedly the laws under which we work have been instrumental in creating the conditions which made it possible, and by unwise legislation it would be easy enough to destroy it. There will undoubtedly be periods of depression. The wave will recede; but the tide will advance. This Nation is seated on a continent flanked by two great oceans. It is composed of men the descendants of pioneers, or, in a sense, pioneers themselves; of men winnowed out from among the nations of the Old World by the energy, boldness, and love of adventure found in their own eager hearts. Such a nation, so placed, will surely wrest success from fortune.

As a people we have played a large part in the world, and we are bent upon making our future even larger than the past. In particular, the events of the last four years have definitely decided that, for woe or for weal, our place must be great among the nations. We may either fail greatly or succeed greatly; but we can not avoid the endeavor from which either great failure or great success must come. Even if we would, we can not play a small part. If we should try, all that would follow would be that we should play a large part ignobly and shamefully.

But our people, the sons of the men of the Civil War, the sons of the men who had iron in their blood, rejoice in the present and face the future high of heart and resolute of will. Ours is not the creed of the weakling and the coward; ours is the gospel of hope and of triumphant endeavor. We do not shrink from the struggle before us. There are many problems for us to face at the outset of the twentieth century—grave problems abroad and still graver at home; but we know that we can solve them and solve them well, provided only that we bring to the solution the qualities of head and heart which were shown by the men who, in the days of Washington, founded this Government, and, in the days of Lincoln, preserved it.

No country has ever occupied a higher plane of material well-being than ours at the present moment. This well-being is due to no sudden or accidental causes, but to the play of the economic forces in this country for over a century; to our laws, our sustained and continuous policies; above all, to the high individual average of our citizenship. Great fortunes have been won by those who have taken the lead in this phenomenal industrial development, and most of these fortunes have been won not by doing evil, but as an incident to action which has benefited the community as a whole. Never before has material well-being been so widely diffused among our people. Great fortunes have been accumulated, and yet in the aggregate these fortunes are small indeed when compared to the wealth of the people as a whole. The plain people are better off than they have ever been before. The insurance companies, which are practically mutual benefit societies—especially helpful to men of moderate means—represent accumulations of capital which are among the largest in this country. There are more deposits in the savings banks, more owners of farms, more well-paid wage-workers in this country now than ever before in our history. Of course, when the conditions have favored the growth of so much that was good, they have also favored somewhat the growth of what was evil. It is eminently necessary that we should endeavor to cut out this evil, but let us keep a due sense of proportion; let us not in fixing our gaze upon the lesser evil forget the greater good. The evils are real and some of them are menacing, but they are the outgrowth, not of misery or decadence, but of prosperity—of the progress of our gigantic industrial development. This industrial development must not be checked, but side by side with it should go such progressive regulation as will diminish the evils. We should fail in our duty if we did not try to remedy the evils, but we shall succeed only if we proceed patiently, with practical common sense as well as resolution, separating the good from the bad and holding on to the former while endeavoring to get rid of the latter.

In my Message to the present Congress at its first session I discussed at length the question of the regulation of those big corporations commonly doing an interstate business, often with some tendency to monopoly, which are popularly known as trusts. The experience of the past year has emphasized, in my opinion, the desirability of the steps I then proposed. A fundamental requisite of social efficiency is a high standard of individual energy and excellence; but this is in no wise inconsistent with power to act in combination for aims which can not so well be achieved by the individual acting alone. A fundamental base of civilization is the inviolability of property; but this is in no wise inconsistent with the right of society to regulate the exercise of the artificial powers which it confers upon the owners of property, under the name of corporate franchises, in such a way as to prevent the misuse of these powers. Corporations, and especially combinations of corporations, should be managed under public regulation. Experience has shown that under our system of government the necessary supervision can not be obtained by State action. It must therefore be achieved by national action. Our aim is not to do away with corporations; on the contrary, these big aggregations are an inevitable development of modern industrialism, and the effort to destroy them would be futile unless accomplished in ways that would work the utmost mischief to the entire body politic. We can do nothing of good in the way of regulating and supervising these corporations until we fix clearly in our minds that we are not attacking the corporations, but endeavoring to do away with any evil in them. We are not hostile to them; we are merely determined that they shall be so handled as to subserve the public good. We draw the line against misconduct, not against wealth. The capitalist who, alone or in conjunction with his fellows, performs some great industrial feat by which he wins money is a welldoer, not a wrongdoer, provided only he works in proper and legitimate lines. We wish to favor such a man when he does well. We wish to supervise and control his actions only to prevent him from doing ill. Publicity can do no harm to the honest corporation; and we need not be overtender about sparing the dishonest corporation.

In curbing and regulating the combinations of capital which are or may become injurious to the public we must be careful not to stop the great enterprises which have legitimately reduced the cost of production, not to abandon the place which our country has won in the leadership of the international industrial world, not to strike down wealth with the result of closing factories and mines, of turning the wage-worker idle in the streets and leaving the farmer without a market for what he grows. Insistence upon the impossible means delay in achieving the possible, exactly as, on the other hand, the stubborn defense alike of what is good and what is bad in the existing system, the resolute effort to obstruct any attempt at betterment, betrays blindness to the historic truth that wise evolution is the sure safeguard against revolution.

No more important subject can come before the Congress than this of the regulation of interstate business. This country can not afford to sit supine on the plea that under our peculiar system of government we are helpless in the presence of the new conditions, and unable to grapple with them or to cut out whatever of evil has arisen in connection with them. The power of the Congress to regulate interstate commerce is an absolute and unqualified grant, and without limitations other than those prescribed by the Constitution. The Congress has constitutional authority to make all laws necessary and proper for executing this power, and I am satisfied that this power has not been exhausted by any legislation now on the statute books. It is evident, therefore, that evils restrictive of commercial freedom and entailing restraint upon national commerce fall within the regulative power of the Congress, and that a wise and reasonable law would be a necessary and proper exercise of Congressional authority to the end that such evils should be eradicated.

I believe that monopolies, unjust discriminations, which prevent or cripple competition, fraudulent overcapitalization, and other evils in trust organizations and practices which injuriously affect interstate trade can be prevented under the power of the Congress to "regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States" through regulations and requirements operating directly upon such commerce, the instrumentalities thereof, and those engaged therein.

I earnestly recommend this subject to the consideration of the Congress with a view to the passage of a law reasonable in its provisions and effective in its operations, upon which the questions can be finally adjudicated that now raise doubts as to the necessity of constitutional amendment. If it prove impossible to accomplish the purposes above set forth by such a law, then, assuredly, we should not shrink from amending the Constitution so as to secure beyond peradventure the power sought.

The Congress has not heretofore made any appropriation for the better enforcement of the antitrust law as it now stands. Very much has been done by the Department of Justice in securing the enforcement of this law, but much more could be done if the Congress would make a special appropriation for this purpose, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General.

One proposition advocated has been the reduction of the tariff as a means of reaching the evils of the trusts which fall within the category I have described. Not merely would this be wholly ineffective, but the diversion of our efforts in such a direction would mean the abandonment of all intelligent attempt to do away with these evils. Many of the largest corporations, many of those which should certainly be included in any proper scheme of regulation, would not be affected in the slightest degree by a change in the tariff, save as such change interfered with the general prosperity of the country. The only relation of the tariff to big corporations as a whole is that the tariff makes manufactures profitable, and the tariff remedy proposed would be in effect simply to make manufactures unprofitable. To remove the tariff as a punitive measure directed against trusts would inevitably result in ruin to the weaker competitors who are struggling against them. Our aim should be not by unwise tariff changes to give foreign products the advantage over domestic products, but by proper regulation to give domestic competition a fair chance; and this end can not be reached by any tariff changes which would affect unfavorably all domestic competitors, good and bad alike. The question of regulation of the trusts stands apart from the question of tariff revision.

Stability of economic policy must always be the prime economic need of this country. This stability should not be fossilization. The country has acquiesced in the wisdom of the protective-tariff principle. It is exceedingly undesirable that this system should be destroyed or that there should be violent and radical changes therein. Our past experience shows that great prosperity in this country has always come under a protective tariff; and that the country can not prosper under fitful tariff changes at short intervals. Moreover, if the tariff laws as a whole work well, and if business has prospered under them and is prospering, it is better to endure for a time slight inconveniences and inequalities in some schedules than to upset business by too quick and too radical changes. It is most earnestly to be wished that we could treat the tariff from the standpoint solely of our business needs. It is, perhaps, too much to hope that partisanship may be entirely excluded from consideration of the subject, but at least it can be made secondary to the business interests of the country—that is, to the interests of our people as a whole. Unquestionably these business interests will best be served if together with fixity of principle as regards the tariff we combine a system which will permit us from time to time to make the necessary reapplication of the principle to the shifting national needs. We must take scrupulous care that the reapplication shall be made in such a way that it will not amount to a dislocation of our system, the mere threat of which (not to speak of the performance) would produce paralysis in the business energies of the community. The first consideration in making these changes would, of course, be to preserve the principle which underlies our whole tariff system—that is, the principle of putting American business interests at least on a full equality with interests abroad, and of always allowing a sufficient rate of duty to more than cover the difference between the labor cost here and abroad. The well-being of the wage-worker, like the well-being of the tiller of the soil, should be treated as an essential in shaping our whole economic policy. There must never be any change which will jeopardize the standard of comfort, the standard of wages of the American wage-worker.

One way in which the readjustment sought can be reached is by reciprocity treaties. It is greatly to be desired that such treaties may be adopted. They can be used to widen our markets and to give a greater field for the activities of our producers on the one hand, and on the other hand to secure in practical shape the lowering of duties when they are no longer needed for protection among our own people, or when the minimum of damage done may be disregarded for the sake of the maximum of good accomplished. If it prove impossible to ratify the pending treaties, and if there seem to be no warrant for the endeavor to execute others, or to amend the pending treaties so that they can be ratified, then the same end—to secure reciprocity—should be met by direct legislation.

Wherever the tariff conditions are such that a needed change can not with advantage be made by the application of the reciprocity idea, then it can be made outright by a lowering of duties on a given product. If possible, such change should be made only after the fullest consideration by practical experts, who should approach the subject from a business standpoint, having in view both the particular interests affected and the commercial well-being of the people as a whole. The machinery for providing such careful investigation can readily be supplied. The executive department has already at its disposal methods of collecting facts and figures; and if the Congress desires additional consideration to that which will be given the subject by its own committees, then a commission of business experts can be appointed whose duty it should be to recommend action by the Congress after a deliberate and scientific examination of the various schedules as they are affected by the changed and changing conditions. The unhurried and unbiased report of this commission would show what changes should be made in the various schedules, and how far these changes could go without also changing the great prosperity which this country is now enjoying, or upsetting its fixed economic policy.

The cases in which the tariff can produce a monopoly are so few as to constitute an inconsiderable factor in the question; but of course if in any case it be found that a given rate of duty does promote a monopoly which works ill, no protectionist would object to such reduction of the duty as would equalize competition.

In my judgment, the tariff on anthracite coal should be removed, and anthracite put actually, where it now is nominally, on the free list. This would have no effect at all save in crises; but in crises it might be of service to the people.

Interest rates are a potent factor in business activity, and in order that these rates may be equalized to meet the varying needs of the seasons and of widely separated communities, and to prevent the recurrence of financial stringencies which injuriously affect legitimate business, it is necessary that there should be an element of elasticity in our monetary system. Banks are the natural servants of commerce, and upon them should be placed, as far as practicable, the burden of furnishing and maintaining a circulation adequate to supply the needs of our diversified industries and of our domestic and foreign commerce; and the issue of this should be so regulated that a sufficient supply should be always available for the business interests of the country.

It would be both unwise and unnecessary at this time to attempt to reconstruct our financial system, which has been the growth of a century; but some additional legislation is, I think, desirable. The mere outline of any plan sufficiently comprehensive to meet these requirements would transgress the appropriate limits of this communication. It is suggested, however, that all future legislation on the subject should be with the view of encouraging the use of such instrumentalities as will automatically supply every legitimate demand of productive industries and of commerce, not only in the amount, but in the character of circulation; and of making all kinds of money interchangeable, and, at the will of the holder, convertible into the established gold standard.

I again call your attention to the need of passing a proper immigration law, covering the points outlined in my Message to you at the first session of the present Congress; substantially such a bill has already passed the House.

How to secure fair treatment alike for labor and for capital, how to hold in check the unscrupulous man, whether employer or employee, without weakening individual initiative, without hampering and cramping the industrial development of the country, is a problem fraught with great difficulties and one which it is of the highest importance to solve on lines of sanity and far-sighted common sense as well as of devotion to the right. This is an era of federation and combination. Exactly as business men find they must often work through corporations, and as it is a constant tendency of these corporations to grow larger, so it is often necessary for laboring men to work in federations, and these have become important factors of modern industrial life. Both kinds of federation, capitalistic and labor, can do much good, and as a necessary corollary they can both do evil. Opposition to each kind of organization should take the form of opposition to whatever is bad in the conduct of any given corporation or union—not of attacks upon corporations as such nor upon unions as such; for some of the most far-reaching beneficent work for our people has been accomplished through both corporations and unions. Each must refrain from arbitrary or tyrannous interference with the rights of others. Organized capital and organized labor alike should remember that in the long run the interest of each must be brought into harmony with the interest of the general public; and the conduct of each must conform to the fundamental rules of obedience to the law, of individual freedom, and of justice and fair dealing toward all. Each should remember that in addition to power it must strive after the realization of healthy, lofty, and generous ideals. Every employer, every wage-worker must be guaranteed his liberty and his right to do as he likes with his property or his labor so long as he does not infringe upon the rights of others. It is of the highest importance that employer and employee alike should endeavor to appreciate each the viewpoint of the other and the sure disaster that will come upon both in the long run if either grows to take as habitual an attitude of sour hostility and distrust toward the other. Few people deserve better of the country than those representatives both of capital and labor—and there are many such—who work continually to bring about a good understanding of this kind, based upon wisdom and upon broad and kindly sympathy between employers and employed. Above all, we need to remember that any kind of class animosity in the political world is, if possible, even more wicked, even more destructive to national welfare, than sectional, race, or religious animosity. We can get good government only upon condition that we keep true to the principles upon which this Nation was founded, and judge each man not as a part of a class, but upon his individual merits. All that we have a right to ask of any man, rich or poor, whatever his creed, his occupation, his birthplace, or his residence, is that he shall act well and honorably by his neighbor and by his country. We are neither for the rich man as such nor for the poor man as such; we are for the upright man, rich or poor. So far as the constitutional powers of the National Government touch these matters of general and vital moment to the Nation, they should be exercised in conformity with the principles above set forth.

It is earnestly hoped that a secretary of commerce may be created, with a seat in the Cabinet. The rapid multiplication of questions affecting labor and capital, the growth and complexity of the organizations through which both labor and capital now find expression, the steady tendency toward the employment of capital in huge corporations, and the wonderful strides of this country toward leadership in the international business world justify an urgent demand for the creation of such a position. Substantially all the leading commercial bodies in this country have united in requesting its creation. It is desirable that some such measure as that which has already passed the Senate be enacted into law. The creation of such a department would in itself be an advance toward dealing with and exercising supervision over the whole subject of the great corporations doing an interstate business; and with this end in view, the Congress should endow the department with large powers, which could be increased as experience might show the need.

I hope soon to submit to the Senate a reciprocity treaty with Cuba. On May 20 last the United States kept its promise to the island by formally vacating Cuban soil and turning Cuba over to those whom her own people had chosen as the first officials of the new Republic.

Cuba lies at our doors, and whatever affects her for good or for ill affects us also. So much have our people felt this that in the Platt amendment we definitely took the ground that Cuba must hereafter have closer political relations with us than with any other power. Thus in a sense Cuba has become a part of our international political system. This makes it necessary that in return she should be given some of the benefits of becoming part of our economic system. It is, from our own standpoint, a short-sighted and mischievous policy to fail to recognize this need. Moreover, it is unworthy of a mighty and generous nation, itself the greatest and most successful republic in history, to refuse to stretch out a helping hand to a young and weak sister republic just entering upon its career of independence. We should always fearlessly insist upon our rights in the face of the strong, and we should with ungrudging hand do our generous duty by the weak. I urge the adoption of reciprocity with Cuba not only because it is eminently for our own interests to control the Cuban market and by every means to foster our supremacy in the tropical lands and waters south of us, but also because we, of the giant republic of the north, should make all our sister nations of the American Continent feel that whenever they will permit it we desire to show ourselves disinterestedly and effectively their friend.

A convention with Great Britain has been concluded, which will be at once laid before the Senate for ratification, providing for reciprocal trade arrangements between the United States and Newfoundland on substantially the lines of the convention formerly negotiated by the Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine. I believe reciprocal trade relations will be greatly to the advantage of both countries.

As civilization grows warfare becomes less and less the normal condition of foreign relations. The last century has seen a marked diminution of wars between civilized powers; wars with uncivilized powers are largely mere matters of international police duty, essential for the welfare of the world. Wherever possible, arbitration or some similar method should be employed in lieu of war to settle difficulties between civilized nations, although as yet the world has not progressed sufficiently to render it possible, or necessarily desirable, to invoke arbitration in every case. The formation of the international tribunal which sits at The Hague is an event of good omen from which great consequences for the welfare of all mankind may flow. It is far better, where possible, to invoke such a permanent tribunal than to create special arbitrators for a given purpose.

It is a matter of sincere congratulation to our country that the United States and Mexico should have been the first to use the good offices of The Hague Court. This was done last summer with most satisfactory results in the case of a claim at issue between us and our sister Republic. It is earnestly to be hoped that this first case will serve as a precedent for others, in which not only the United States but foreign nations may take advantage of the machinery already in existence at The Hague.

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the Hawaiian fire claims, which were the subject of careful investigation during the last session.

The Congress has wisely provided that we shall build at once an isthmian canal, if possible at Panama. The Attorney-General reports that we can undoubtedly acquire good title from the French Panama canal company. Negotiations are now pending with Colombia to secure her assent to our building the canal. This canal will be one of the greatest engineering feats of the twentieth century; a greater engineering feat than has yet been accomplished during the history of mankind. The work should be carried out as a continuing policy without regard to change of Administration; and it should be begun under circumstances which will make it a matter of pride for all Administrations to continue the policy.

The canal will be of great benefit to America, and of importance to all the world. It will be of advantage to us industrially and also as improving our military position. It will be of advantage to the countries of tropical America. It is earnestly to be hoped that all of these countries will do as some of them have already done with signal success, and will invite to their shores commerce and improve their material conditions by recognizing that stability and order are the prerequisites of successful development. No independent nation in America need have the slightest fear of aggression from the United States. It behooves each one to maintain order within its own borders and to discharge its just obligations to foreigners. When this is done, they can rest assured that, be they strong or weak, they have nothing to dread from outside interference. More and more the increasing interdependence and complexity of international political and economic relations render it incumbent on all civilized and orderly powers to insist on the proper policing of the world.

During the fall of 1901 a communication was addressed to the Secretary of State, asking whether permission would be granted by the President to a corporation to lay a cable from a point on the California coast to the Philippine Islands by way of Hawaii. A statement of conditions or terms upon which such corporation would undertake to lay and operate a cable was volunteered.

Inasmuch as the Congress was shortly to convene, and Pacific-cable legislation had been the subject of consideration by the Congress for several years, it seemed to me wise to defer action upon the application until the Congress had first an opportunity to act. The Congress adjourned without taking any action, leaving the matter in exactly the same condition in which it stood when the Congress convened.

Meanwhile it appears that the Commercial Pacific Cable Company had promptly proceeded with preparations for laying its cable. It also made application to the President for access to and use of soundings taken by the U. S. S. Nero, for the purpose of discovering a practicable route for a trans-Pacific cable, the company urging that with access to these soundings it could complete its cable much sooner than if it were required to take soundings upon its own account. Pending consideration of this subject, it appeared important and desirable to attach certain conditions to the permission to examine and use the soundings, if it should be granted.

In consequence of this solicitation of the cable company, certain conditions were formulated, upon which the President was willing to allow access to these soundings and to consent to the landing and laying of the cable, subject to any alterations or additions thereto imposed by the Congress. This was deemed proper, especially as it was clear that a cable connection of some kind with China, a foreign country, was a part of the company's plan. This course was, moreover, in accordance with a line of precedents, including President Grant's action in the case of the first French cable, explained to the Congress in his Annual Message of December, 1875, and the instance occurring in 1879 of the second French cable from Brest to St. Pierre, with a branch to Cape Cod.

These conditions prescribed, among other things, a maximum rate for commercial messages and that the company should construct a line from the Philippine Islands to China, there being at present, as is well known, a British line from Manila to Hongkong.

The representatives of the cable company kept these conditions long under consideration, continuing, in the meantime, to prepare for laying the cable. They have, however, at length acceded to them, and an all-American line between our Pacific coast and the Chinese Empire, by way of Honolulu and the Philippine Islands, is thus provided for, and is expected within a few months to be ready for business.

Among the conditions is one reserving the power of the Congress to modify or repeal any or all of them. A copy of the conditions is herewith transmitted.

Of Porto Rico it is only necessary to say that the prosperity of the island and the wisdom with which it has been governed have been such as to make it serve as an example of all that is best in insular administration.

On July 4 last, on the one hundred and twenty-sixth anniversary of the declaration of our independence, peace and amnesty were promulgated in the Philippine Islands. Some trouble has since from time to time threatened with the Mohammedan Moros, but with the late insurrectionary Filipinos the war has entirely ceased. Civil government has now been introduced. Not only does each Filipino enjoy such rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness as he has never before known during the recorded history of the islands, but the people taken as a whole now enjoy a measure of self-government greater than that granted to any other Orientals by any foreign power and greater than that enjoyed by any other Orientals under their own governments, save the Japanese alone. We have not gone too far in granting these rights of liberty and self-government; but we have certainly gone to the limit that in the interests of the Philippine people themselves it was wise or just to go. To hurry matters, to go faster than we are now going, would entail calamity on the people of the islands. No policy ever entered into by the American people has vindicated itself in more signal manner than the policy of holding the Philippines. The triumph of our arms, above all the triumph of our laws and principles, has come sooner than we had any right to expect. Too much praise can not be given to the Army for what it has done in the Philippines both in warfare and from an administrative standpoint in preparing the way for civil government; and similar credit belongs to the civil authorities for the way in which they have planted the seeds of self-government in the ground thus made ready for them. The courage, the unflinching endurance, the high soldierly efficiency, and the general kind-heartedness and humanity of our troops have been strikingly manifested. There now remain only some fifteen thousand troops in the islands. All told, over one hundred thousand have been sent there. Of course, there have been individual instances of wrongdoing among them. They warred under fearful difficulties of climate and surroundings; and under the strain of the terrible provocations which they continually received from their foes, occasional instances of cruel retaliation occurred. Every effort has been made to prevent such cruelties, and finally these efforts have been completely successful. Every effort has also been made to detect and punish the wrongdoers. After making all allowance for these misdeeds, it remains true that few indeed have been the instances in which war has been waged by a civilized power against semicivilized or barbarous forces where there has been so little wrongdoing by the victors as in the Philippine Islands. On the other hand, the amount of difficult, important, and beneficent work which has been done is well-nigh incalculable.

Taking the work of the Army and the civil authorities together, it may be questioned whether anywhere else in modern times the world has seen a better example of real constructive statesmanship than our people have given in the Philippine Islands. High praise should also be given those Filipinos, in the aggregate very numerous, who have accepted the new conditions and joined with our representatives to work with hearty good will for the welfare of the islands.

The Army has been reduced to the minimum allowed by law. It is very small for the size of the Nation, and most certainly should be kept at the highest point of efficiency. The senior officers are given scant chance under ordinary conditions to exercise commands commensurate with their rank, under circumstances which would fit them to do their duty in time of actual war. A system of maneuvering our Army in bodies of some little size has been begun and should be steadily continued. Without such maneuvers it is folly to expect that in the event of hostilities with any serious foe even a small army corps could be handled to advantage. Both our officers and enlisted men are such that we can take hearty pride in them. No better material can be found. But they must be thoroughly trained, both as individuals and in the mass. The marksmanship of the men must receive special attention. In the circumstances of modern warfare the man must act far more on his own individual responsibility than ever before, and the high individual efficiency of the unit is of the utmost importance. Formerly this unit was the regiment; it is now not the regiment, not even the troop or company; it is the individual soldier. Every effort must be made to develop every workmanlike and soldierly quality in both the officer and the enlisted man.

I urgently call your attention to the need of passing a bill providing for a general staff and for the reorganization of the supply departments on the lines of the bill proposed by the Secretary of War last year. When the young officers enter the Army from West Point they probably stand above their compeers in any other military service. Every effort should be made, by training, by reward of merit, by scrutiny into their careers and capacity, to keep them of the same high relative excellence throughout their careers.

The measure providing for the reorganization of the militia system and for securing the highest efficiency in the National Guard, which has already passed the House, should receive prompt attention and action. It is of great importance that the relation of the National Guard to the militia and volunteer forces of the United States should be defined, and that in place of our present obsolete laws a practical and efficient system should be adopted.

Provision should be made to enable the Secretary of War to keep cavalry and artillery horses, worn-out in long performance of duty. Such horses fetch but a trifle when sold; and rather than turn them out to the misery awaiting them when thus disposed of, it would be better to employ them at light work around the posts, and when necessary to put them painlessly to death.

For the first time in our history naval maneuvers on a large scale are being held under the immediate command of the Admiral of the Navy. Constantly increasing attention is being paid to the gunnery of the Navy, but it is yet far from what it should be. I earnestly urge that the increase asked for by the Secretary of the Navy in the appropriation for improving the marksmanship be granted. In battle the only shots that count are the shots that hit. It is necessary to provide ample funds for practice with the great guns in time of peace. These funds must provide not only for the purchase of projectiles, but for allowances for prizes to encourage the gun crews, and especially the gun pointers, and for perfecting an intelligent system under which alone it is possible to get good practice.

There should be no halt in the work of building up the Navy, providing every year additional fighting craft. We are a very rich country, vast in extent of territory and great in population; a country, moreover, which has an Army diminutive indeed when compared with that of any other first-class power. We have deliberately made our own certain foreign policies which demand the possession of a first-class navy. The isthmian canal will greatly increase the efficiency of our Navy if the Navy is of sufficient size; but if we have an inadequate navy, then the building of the canal would be merely giving a hostage to any power of superior strength. The Monroe Doctrine should be treated as the cardinal feature of American foreign policy; but it would be worse than idle to assert it unless we intended to back it up, and it can be backed up only by a thoroughly good navy. A good navy is not a provocative of war. It is the surest guaranty of peace.

Each individual unit of our Navy should be the most efficient of its kind as regards both material and personnel that is to be found in the world. I call your special attention to the need of providing for the manning of the ships. Serious trouble threatens us if we can not do better than we are now doing as regards securing the services of a sufficient number of the highest type of sailormen, of sea mechanics. The veteran seamen of our war ships are of as high a type as can be found in any navy which rides the waters of the world; they are unsurpassed in daring, in resolution, in readiness, in thorough knowledge of their profession. They deserve every consideration that can be shown them. But there are not enough of them. It is no more possible to improvise a crew than it is possible to improvise a war ship. To build the finest ship, with the deadliest battery, and to send it afloat with a raw crew, no matter how brave they were individually, would be to insure disaster if a foe of average capacity were encountered. Neither ships nor men can be improvised when war has begun.

We need a thousand additional officers in order to properly man the ships now provided for and under construction. The classes at the Naval School at Annapolis should be greatly enlarged. At the same time that we thus add the officers where we need them, we should facilitate the retirement of those at the head of the list whose usefulness has become impaired. Promotion must be fostered if the service is to be kept efficient.

The lamentable scarcity of officers, and the large number of recruits and of unskilled men necessarily put aboard the new vessels as they have been commissioned, has thrown upon our officers, and especially on the lieutenants and junior grades, unusual labor and fatigue and has gravely strained their powers of endurance. Nor is there sign of any immediate let-up in this strain. It must continue for some time longer, until more officers are graduated from Annapolis, and until the recruits become trained and skillful in their duties. In these difficulties incident upon the development of our war fleet the conduct of all our officers has been creditable to the service, and the lieutenants and junior grades in particular have displayed an ability and a steadfast cheerfulness which entitles them to the ungrudging thanks of all who realize the disheartening trials and fatigues to which they are of necessity subjected.

There is not a cloud on the horizon at present. There seems not the slightest chance of trouble with a foreign power. We most earnestly hope that this state of things may continue; and the way to insure its continuance is to provide for a thoroughly efficient navy. The refusal to maintain such a navy would invite trouble, and if trouble came would insure disaster. Fatuous self-complacency or vanity, or short-sightedness in refusing to prepare for danger, is both foolish and wicked in such a nation as ours; and past experience has shown that such fatuity in refusing to recognize or prepare for any crisis in advance is usually succeeded by a mad panic of hysterical fear once the crisis has actually arrived.

The striking increase in the revenues of the Post-Office Department shows clearly the prosperity of our people and the increasing activity of the business of the country.

The receipts of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30 last amounted to $121,848,047.26, an increase of $10,216,853.87 over the preceding year, the largest increase known in the history of the postal service. The magnitude of this increase will best appear from the fact that the entire postal receipts for the year 1860 amounted to but $8,518,067.

Rural free-delivery service is no longer in the experimental stage; it has become a fixed policy. The results following its introduction have fully justified the Congress in the large appropriations made for its establishment and extension. The average yearly increase in post-office receipts in the rural districts of the country is about two per cent. We are now able, by actual results, to show that where rural free-delivery service has been established to such an extent as to enable us to make comparisons the yearly increase has been upward of ten per cent.

On November 1, 1902, 11,650 rural free-delivery routes had been established and were in operation, covering about one-third of the territory of the United States available for rural free-delivery service. There are now awaiting the action of the Department petitions and applications for the establishment of 10,748 additional routes. This shows conclusively the want which the establishment of the service has met and the need of further extending it as rapidly as possible. It is justified both by the financial results and by the practical benefits to our rural population; it brings the men who live on the soil into close relations with the active business world; it keeps the farmer in daily touch with the markets; it is a potential educational force; it enhances the value of farm property, makes farm life far pleasanter and less isolated, and will do much to check the undesirable current from country to city.

It is to be hoped that the Congress will make liberal appropriations for the continuance of the service already established and for its further extension.

Few subjects of more importance have been taken up by the Congress in recent years than the inauguration of the system of nationally-aided irrigation for the arid regions of the far West. A good beginning therein has been made. Now that this policy of national irrigation has been adopted, the need of thorough and scientific forest protection will grow more rapidly than ever throughout the public-land States.

Legislation should be provided for the protection of the game, and the wild creatures generally, on the forest reserves. The senseless slaughter of game, which can by judicious protection be permanently preserved on our national reserves for the people as a whole, should be stopped at once. It is, for instance, a serious count against our national good sense to permit the present practice of butchering off such a stately and beautiful creature as the elk for its antlers or tusks.

So far as they are available for agriculture, and to whatever extent they may be reclaimed under the national irrigation law, the remaining public lands should be held rigidly for the home builder, the settler who lives on his land, and for no one else. In their actual use the desert-land law, the timber and stone law, and the commutation clause of the homestead law have been so perverted from the intention with which they were enacted as to permit the acquisition of large areas of the public domain for other than actual settlers and the consequent prevention of settlement. Moreover, the approaching exhaustion of the public ranges has of late led to much discussion as to the best manner of using these public lands in the West which are suitable chiefly or only for grazing. The sound and steady development of the West depends upon the building up of homes therein. Much of our prosperity as a nation has been due to the operation of the homestead law. On the other hand, we should recognize the fact that in the grazing region the man who corresponds to the homesteader may be unable to settle permanently if only allowed to use the same amount of pasture land that his brother, the homesteader, is allowed to use of arable land. One hundred and sixty acres of fairly rich and well-watered soil, or a much smaller amount of irrigated land, may keep a family in plenty, whereas no one could get a living from one hundred and sixty acres of dry pasture land capable of supporting at the outside only one head of cattle to every ten acres. In the past great tracts of the public domain have been fenced in by persons having no title thereto, in direct defiance of the law forbidding the maintenance or construction of any such unlawful inclosure of public land. For various reasons there has been little interference with such inclosures in the past, but ample notice has now been given the trespassers, and all the resources at the command of the Government will hereafter be used to put a stop to such trespassing.

In view of the capital importance of these matters, I commend them to the earnest consideration of the Congress, and if the Congress finds difficulty in dealing with them from lack of thorough knowledge of the subject, I recommend that provision be made for a commission of experts specially to investigate and report upon the complicated questions involved.

I especially urge upon the Congress the need of wise legislation for Alaska. It is not to our credit as a nation that Alaska, which has been ours for thirty-five years, should still have as poor a system of laws as is the case. No country has a more valuable possession—in mineral wealth, in fisheries, furs, forests, and also in land available for certain kinds of farming and stockgrowing. It is a territory of great size and varied resources, well fitted to support a large permanent population. Alaska needs a good land law and such provisions for homesteads and preemptions as will encourage permanent settlement. We should shape legislation with a view not to the exploiting and abandoning of the territory, but to the building up of homes therein. The land laws should be liberal in type, so as to hold out inducements to the actual settler whom we most desire to see take possession of the country. The forests of Alaska should be protected, and, as a secondary but still important matter, the game also, and at the same time it is imperative that the settlers should be allowed to cut timber, under proper regulations, for their own use. Laws should be enacted to protect the Alaskan salmon fisheries against the greed which would destroy them. They should be preserved as a permanent industry and food supply. Their management and control should be turned over to the Commission of Fish and Fisheries. Alaska should have a Delegate in the Congress. It would be well if a Congressional committee could visit Alaska and investigate its needs on the ground.

In dealing with the Indians our aim should be their ultimate absorption into the body of our people. But in many cases this absorption must and should be very slow. In portions of the Indian Territory the mixture of blood has gone on at the same time with progress in wealth and education, so that there are plenty of men with varying degrees of purity of Indian blood who are absolutely indistinguishable in point of social, political, and economic ability from their white associates. There are other tribes which have as yet made no perceptible advance toward such equality. To try to force such tribes too fast is to prevent their going forward at all. Moreover, the tribes live under widely different conditions. Where a tribe has made considerable advance and lives on fertile farming soil it is possible to allot the members lands in severalty much as is the case with white settlers. There are other tribes where such a course is not desirable. On the arid prairie lands the effort should be to induce the Indians to lead pastoral rather than agricultural lives, and to permit them to settle in villages rather than to force them into isolation.

The large Indian schools situated remote from any Indian reservation do a special and peculiar work of great importance. But, excellent though these are, an immense amount of additional work must be done on the reservations themselves among the old, and above all among the young, Indians.

The first and most important step toward the absorption of the Indian is to teach him to earn his living; yet it is not necessarily to be assumed that in each community all Indians must become either tillers of the soil or stock raisers. Their industries may properly be diversified, and those who show special desire or adaptability for industrial or even commercial pursuits should be encouraged so far as practicable to follow out each his own bent.

Every effort should be made to develop the Indian along the lines of natural aptitude, and to encourage the existing native industries peculiar to certain tribes, such as the various kinds of basket weaving, canoe building, smith work, and blanket work. Above all, the Indian boys and girls should be given confident command of colloquial English, and should ordinarily be prepared for a vigorous struggle with the conditions under which their people live, rather than for immediate absorption into some more highly developed community.

The officials who represent the Government in dealing with the Indians work under hard conditions, and also under conditions which render it easy to do wrong and very difficult to detect wrong. Consequently they should be amply paid on the one hand, and on the other hand a particularly high standard of conduct should be demanded from them, and where misconduct can be proved the punishment should be exemplary.

In no department of governmental work in recent years has there been greater success than in that of giving scientific aid to the farming population, thereby showing them how most efficiently to help themselves. There is no need of insisting upon its importance, for the welfare of the farmer is fundamentally necessary to the welfare of the Republic as a whole. In addition to such work as quarantine against animal and vegetable plagues, and warring against them when here introduced, much efficient help has been rendered to the farmer by the introduction of new plants specially fitted for cultivation under the peculiar conditions existing in different portions of the country. New cereals have been established in the semi-arid West. For instance, the practicability of producing the best types of macaroni wheats in regions of an annual rainfall of only ten inches or thereabouts has been conclusively demonstrated. Through the introduction of new rices in Louisiana and Texas the production of rice in this country has been made to about equal the home demand. In the Southwest the possibility of regrassing overstocked range lands has been demonstrated; in the North many new forage crops have been introduced, while in the East it has been shown that some of our choicest fruits can be stored and shipped in such a way as to find a profitable market abroad.

I again recommend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the plans of the Smithsonian Institution for making the Museum under its charge worthy of the Nation, and for preserving at the National Capital not only records of the vanishing races of men but of the animals of this continent which, like the buffalo, will soon become extinct unless specimens from which their representatives may be renewed are sought in their native regions and maintained there in safety.

The District of Columbia is the only part of our territory in which the National Government exercises local or municipal functions, and where in consequence the Government has a free hand in reference to certain types of social and economic legislation which must be essentially local or municipal in their character. The Government should see to it, for instance, that the hygienic and sanitary legislation affecting Washington is of a high character. The evils of slum dwellings, whether in the shape of crowded and congested tenement-house districts or of the back-alley type, should never be permitted to grow up in Washington. The city should be a model in every respect for all the cities of the country. The charitable and correctional systems of the District should receive consideration at the hands of the Congress to the end that they may embody the results of the most advanced thought in these fields. Moreover, while Washington is not a great industrial city, there is some industrialism here, and our labor legislation, while it would not be important in itself, might be made a model for the rest of the Nation. We should pass, for instance, a wise employer's-liability act for the District of Columbia, and we need such an act in our navy-yards. Railroad companies in the District ought to be required by law to block their frogs.

The safety-appliance law, for the better protection of the lives and limbs of railway employees, which was passed in 1893, went into full effect on August 1, 1901. It has resulted in averting thousands of casualties. Experience shows, however, the necessity of additional legislation to perfect this law. A bill to provide for this passed the Senate at the last session. It is to be hoped that some such measure may now be enacted into law.

There is a growing tendency to provide for the publication of masses of documents for which there is no public demand and for the printing of which there is no real necessity. Large numbers of volumes are turned out by the Government printing presses for which there is no justification. Nothing should be printed by any of the Departments unless it contains something of permanent value, and the Congress could with advantage cut down very materially on all the printing which it has now become customary to provide. The excessive cost of Government printing is a strong argument against the position of those who are inclined on abstract grounds to advocate the Government's doing any work which can with propriety be left in private hands.

Gratifying progress has been made during the year in the extension of the merit system of making appointments in the Government service. It should be extended by law to the District of Columbia. It is much to be desired that our consular system be established by law on a basis providing for appointment and promotion only in consequence of proved fitness.

Through a wise provision of the Congress at its last session the White House, which had become disfigured by incongruous additions and changes, has now been restored to what it was planned to be by Washington. In making the restorations the utmost care has been exercised to come as near as possible to the early plans and to supplement these plans by a careful study of such buildings as that of the University of Virginia, which was built by Jefferson. The White House is the property of the Nation, and so far as is compatible with living therein it should be kept as it originally was, for the same reasons that we keep Mount Vernon as it originally was. The stately simplicity of its architecture is an expression of the character of the period in which it was built, and is in accord with the purposes it was designed to serve. It is a good thing to preserve such buildings as historic monuments which keep alive our sense of continuity with the Nation's past.

The reports of the several Executive Departments are submitted to the Congress with this communication.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE,

RESIGNATION OF CHAPLAIN MILBURN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table:

1724 GARDEN STREET, SANTA BARBARA, CAL.,
November 20, 1902.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
President United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The infirm state of my health makes it necessary for me to ask you to present my resignation to the Senate. It is with deep sorrow that I have come to this decision, as it was my cherished wish that under favor of the Senate I should conduct its religious service during the remainder of my days.

A friend will take my place until the Senate finds it convenient to accept my resignation.

With sentiments of profound regard for every member of the body, and for none more than for yourself,

I am, my dear Mr. President, faithfully, yours,

W. H. MILBURN,
Chaplain United States Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REPRESENTATION.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 132) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting the District of Columbia; which was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by the legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by legislatures in three-fourths of the United States, shall be valid as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"The District of Columbia shall be considered a State in so far as shall entitle it to representation in the Congress of the United States and in the electoral college, and in said District of Columbia Senators and electors shall be chosen by direct vote of the people."

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment providing for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to pay the heirs of Thomas T. Prentis, late United States consul at Martinique, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAIRBANKS submitted two amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States; which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INTEROCEANIC SHIP CANAL.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, it was Ordered, That the maps, charts, and other memoranda relating to the construction of an interoceanic ship canal, accompanying the Report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, 1899-1901, be returned to said Commission for its temporary use.

BILLS AND DEBATES RELATING TO TRUSTS.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit a concurrent resolution for reference to the Committee on Printing, and I wish to make an observation about it.

The Attorney-General has caused to be compiled a book on bills and debates in Congress relating to trusts. The book has been printed in the Public Printing Office, but only to the extent of about 60 copies, I understand, and they have all been distributed, so that there remains in the Attorney-General's office but one copy. I make mention of this fact so that the Committee on Printing will please take the matter into consideration immediately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 1,600 copies of the compilation recently prepared by direction of the Attorney-General, entitled "Bills and Debates in Congress Relating to Trusts," of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 100 copies for the use of the Department of Justice; and that the Attorney-General shall cause an index to be prepared to said volume, compensation therefor not to exceed $500.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the Senator from Alabama to accept an amendment to his resolution.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution is to go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. McCOMAS. It is an amendment to embrace a copy of all Federal decisions respecting trusts or the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. MORGAN. The amendment can go with the resolution to the committee, and let them consider it. I had not thought about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

AGATHA W. VEST.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Agatha W. Vest, widow of George Pugh Vest, late clerk to the Senate Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

CLAIMS FOR ARMY STORES AND SUPPLIES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of a resolution to reprint Senate Document No. 53, containing reports from the Quartermaster-General and Commissary-General in regard to claims filed before them under the law of July 4, 1864. The supply of the document is about exhausted, and the resolution provides for a reprint of it.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 500 copies of Senate Document No. 53, second session Fifty-fifth Congress, being letters of the Quartermaster-General and Commissary-General of Subsistence, United States Army, War Department, showing the number of claims presented under the law of July 4, 1864, for stores and supplies furnished or taken during the late war, the action had thereon, their present status, and the law of July 4, 1864, and amendatory acts, and the rules and regulations of the War Department in regard to such claims.

MILITARY AND NAVAL RECORDS.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be directed to consider and report on the propriety of publishing the military and naval records of the war of 1812, of the Mexican war, and the military records of the several Indian wars, in the same general style as that of the Rebellion Records.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Postmaster-General be, and hereby is, directed to report to the Senate the amounts of salaries of all postmasters in the State of Massachusetts for the terms of service specified, whose names and terms of service appear on the schedule of such cases in said State hereto attached, adjusted under the act of 1854, and the amount of the salary of each such postmaster adjusted and paid under the act of 1864, so that the difference, if any, between the salary paid and the amount of salary ordered paid by the act of 1883 shall appear in each case specified on the said schedule.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE CHARLES A. RUSSELL.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions of the House of Representatives communicating the intelligence of the death of Hon. CHARLES A. RUSSELL be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. CHARLES A. RUSSELL, late a Representative from the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I desire that the resolutions of the House may lie on the table for the present, and I present the following resolutions, which I ask may be immediately considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Connecticut will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. CHARLES A. RUSSELL, late a Representative from the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 3, 1902, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 2, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Russell is now present, and I ask that he be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. Let him come forward. Unanimous consent was given yesterday that he be sworn in.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. Swann, chosen to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Amos J. Cummings, is here and desires to be sworn in. He has not his credentials, but there is no contest, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to take the oath.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his colleague-elect, Mr. Swann, successor of Mr. Cummings, be sworn in, not having his credentials with him, but there being no contest. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. These two gentlemen will step forward and take the oath of office.

Mr. Russell and Mr. Swann appeared, and the oath of office was administered to them.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. HILL as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, to be numbered 11 on the list, and the majority members below the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Russell to be advanced one number each.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

The SPEAKER also announced the appointment of Mr. PALMER as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, to be numbered 11 on the list, and the other majority members to be advanced one number each.

SUNDRY APPOINTMENTS.

The SPEAKER also announced the following appointments:

Director of the Columbian Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, Mr. FOWLER of New Jersey, vice Mr. Russell of Connecticut, deceased.

Consulting trustee of the Reform School of the District of Columbia, Mr. JENKINS of Wisconsin.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JACKSON of Kansas, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, for six days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SHAFROTH, for one week, on account of sickness.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. HITT, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, the committee appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make, appeared at the bar of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed under resolution of the House to join a like committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses were assembled and the Congress ready to receive any communication he might desire to send, report that your committee has obeyed the order of the House, and, further, the President at an early hour will send to the Congress a message in writing.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House be in recess until half past 12.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 12.30 p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House, at 12.30 o'clock p. m., resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the message from the President; which was read by the Clerk.

[For the message see Senate proceedings of this day.]

[Loud applause on the Republican side on the conclusion of the reading of the message.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the message be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and be printed.

Mr. GROW. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROW. On this motion to refer, is the message itself debatable?

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to say to the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not the practice.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that later the Committee on Ways and Means will report a resolution distributing the message and ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the resolution and the message, when debate will be in order; and I hope that will suit the purposes of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROW. That will suit me just as well as now.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was agreed to; and the message and accompanying papers were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENSES AND COMPENSATION OF ANTHRACITE COAL STRIKE COMMISSION.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I report the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reports the following bill. Does the gentleman desire the bill read or reported by its title?

Mr. CANNON. Only by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15372) to provide for the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that on to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that on to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, the bill which has been reported by its title be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Pending that request, I would like to ask the Chair if that bill will be open for amendments?

The SPEAKER. If considered in the manner requested, it will be open to amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. To-morrow?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will not modify his motion or request for unanimous consent so that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole House and not in the House as in Committee of the Whole? Why not consider it in Committee of the Whole and have opportunity to offer amendments under the five-minute rule?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman would prefer it that way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, on the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee, modifies his request, so that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. One word. I would like to fix, if we can, the time of general debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would say to the gentleman that I have not had opportunity to consult with all the members of the minority on the Committee on Appropriations. I do not think there will be any disposition to debate at any great length. I hope the gentleman will consent to go into Committee of the Whole House, so as to give opportunity for reasonable debate and reasonable opportunity to amend the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I am content.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CANNON. This agreement involves calling it up to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How is that?

Mr. CANNON. To go into Committee of the Whole under the agreement had.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, yes; and that we have the opportunity to make points of order against any part of it or any provision in it.

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe any points of order would lie.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Any points of order that we might have the right to make to any parts of it.

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe any points of order will lie. If it was a general appropriation bill they might lie, but a bill reported by the committee other than a general appropriation bill, I think is not subject to points of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. All I want to say is, that we do not want to waive the right to make any point of order that would lie.

DEATH OF HON. R. C. DE GRAFFENREID AND HON. JOHN L. SHEPPARD.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, since the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress adjourned death has laid a heavy hand upon the delegation in this House from the State of Texas. Two of our honored Representatives have passed away. On August 30 last, at the Riggs House, in this city, the Hon. R. C. DE GRAFFENREID, late a Representative from the Third Congressional district of Texas, died suddenly. On the 11th of October last, at Eureka Springs, Ark., after a long and painful illness, the Hon. JOHN L. SHEPPARD, late a Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of Texas, died.

These were true and worthy men. They were faithful Representatives in this House. This is not the time to enter upon any extended tribute to their memories or to speak at length of their lives and characters. On some suitable occasion hereafter we shall ask the House to designate a time when we can pay such tribute as we believe these good men deserve at our hands. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk the following resolutions, and I ask that they be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas submits resolutions for the present consideration of the House, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. R. C. DE GRAFFENREID, late a Representative from the Third Congressional district of Texas, and of Hon. JOHN L. SHEPPARD, late a Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of Texas.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be communicated to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of these deceased members the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The question was put, and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and in accordance therewith (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 3, 1902.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

WILLIAM B. BATE, a Senator from the State of Tennessee; A. J. MCLAURIN, a Senator from the State of Mississippi; JOSEPH L. RAWLINS, a Senator from the State of Utah, and JAMES P. TALIAFERRO, a Senator from the State of Florida, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1902; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

ORDERS OF GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF CUBA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of June 28, 1902, copies of the orders issued by the governor-general of Cuba from the date of the beginning of his administration up to May 20, 1902; which will be printed.

There is a very large volume of papers accompanying the communication, and the Chair thinks it is better to send them without printing to the Committee on Relations with Cuba, and then the committee can make such suggestion as it pleases.

Mr. CULLOM. I myself was about to make that suggestion, Mr. President.

REPORT OF MARITIME CANAL COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of the report of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and ordered to be printed.

I. WINSLOW AYER.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1904) for the relief of I. Winslow Ayer, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

DUPLICATE BILLS FROM COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. WARREN. By order of the Committee on Claims, I report back adversely from that committee and move the indefinite postponement of some forty-three claims bills, all of which have the same status. They are now before the Court of Claims, and therefore these duplicates should be so reported. I submit a report upon the bills. I move the indefinite postponement of all of them. If there is no objection, I ask that they may be separately noted in the RECORD without being read by title at the desk.

Mr. GALLINGER. They ought to be acted on separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the bills should be separately laid before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the final disposition of any measure ought to be made in open Senate, and that every bill should be read by title. It would do no harm in this case, but the establishment of a different practice might be very serious.

Mr. WARREN. Very well; let that course be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would so hold.

The bills were severally read by title and postponed indefinitely, as follows:

OMNIBUS STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. NELSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, to report it back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute providing for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as one State.

Mr. BATE. I wish the Senator from Minnesota would speak louder. We can not hear him on this side.

Mr. NELSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories to report back the House bill providing for the admission of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico as States of the Union with an amendment in the nature of a substitute providing for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as one State.

Mr. BATE. There is no report accompanying the bill?

Mr. NELSON. There is no written report. The committee have not had time to prepare a report.

Mr. BATE. Do I understand that the committee will yet prepare a report?

Mr. NELSON. The chairman of the committee will respond to that question.

Mr. BATE. The minority also desire time to prepare a report, as I presume there will be a report presented by the majority of the committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is certainly the expectation of the majority to present their views as soon as possible and that the minority will do the same.

Mr. BATE. The report should be made as soon as possible. On the 10th I understand the bill is to come up for action. It becomes the order of business on that day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota reports from the Committee on Territories a bill which will be read by its title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and leave will be given to the committee later on to file a report, and also for the minority to submit their views. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 133) creating a commission to investigate the present pension laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 134) to provide for the refitting of the revenue cutter Fessenden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 135) to provide for the construction of a new lock in the St. Marys Falls Canal, Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the United States consul at Breslau, Germany, to $3,000, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the purchase from Prof. Francis N. Thorpe of the manuscript for a new edition of charters, constitutions, and organic laws of all States, Territories, and colonies now or heretofore forming the United States, and any acts of Congress relating thereto, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DECISIONS RELATING TO TRUSTS.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I submit a concurrent resolution for the printing of decisions respecting trusts and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The concurrent resolution was read by title, as follows:

A concurrent resolution relative to the printing of certain decisions of the Supreme Court and of the inferior Federal courts relating to trusts.

Mr. CULLOM. I will inquire of the Senator from Maryland if any provision is made for collecting the decisions?

Mr. MCCOMAS. The resolution directs the Attorney-General forthwith to make a compilation and to print it forthwith. It can be done within a week.

Mr. CULLOM. I made the inquiry only because there did not seem to be anything read which indicated that it would be done.

Mr. MCCOMAS. It can be done in a week.

The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be prepared forthwith under the direction of the Attorney-General a compilation of all the decisions of the Supreme Court and of the inferior Federal courts relating to trusts or to the act known as the Sherman antitrust law, of which compilation 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 7,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the Department of Justice.

MALINE JOHNSON.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Maline Johnson, widow of Edward Johnson, late a messenger in the Senate of the United States, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

OMNIBUS STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the following bill——

Mr. QUAY. Before the question is put, for my own information, I desire to put a question to my colleague. As he knows, on Wednesday next, by the unanimous agreement of the Senate, what is known as the omnibus statehood bill comes up for consideration after the morning hour. The bill which he is now proposing to take up will undoubtedly occupy some time and create a good deal of discussion. I should be glad to know whether he proposes in any way to interrupt the unanimous-consent agreement made in regard to the statehood bill should this bill carry over that day.

Mr. PENROSE. I took it for granted that of course the agreement, made before our adjournment last spring, would hold and that this bill would yield. I am heartily in favor of the statehood bill, and of course would not desire to press this bill in a manner that would conflict in any way with the prompt consideration of that measure.

Mr. QUAY. Then I have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. Has there been a unanimous-consent agreement to take up the statehood bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has—to make it the unfinished business December 10.

Mr. LODGE. It comes up at 2 o'clock on Wednesday?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At 2 o'clock, and not before.

Mr. HALE. It comes up as unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. There is no agreement as to the continuation of the business. It is then in the hands of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is then in the hands of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. But nothing can prevent it from coming up as the unfinished business on that day. I so understand it. I was present at the time the agreement was made, and it was fully understood then that at that time the bill would be laid before the Senate as the unfinished business. It is then in the power of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. The reason of my inquiry had nothing to do with the particular bill to which the question related, but I supposed it was the practice to print on the Calendar, for the information of the Senate, all such understandings.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is printed on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. Is that upon the Calendar?

Mr. LODGE. It is on the first page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the first page of the Calendar a transcript from the RECORD will be found.

Mr. HOAR. The copy of the Calendar in my hands does not contain it.

Mr. HALE. Some of the copies do not have it.

Mr. HOAR. Then there are different editions of the Calendar. I have one which has no such note. It is not like the copy shown me by my colleague.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, my understanding was that not only the bill should come up at 2 o'clock on the 10th of December, but that it should be continued in order until disposed of. I would be glad to have the unanimous-consent agreement read.

Mr. NELSON. The RECORD shows it.

Mr. HALE. Let me say that I was present when the proposition was made, and it was not proposed in connection with it that the bill should be continued from day to day, but the Senate made it the unfinished business. I spoke to one or two Senators at the time and said that there would be nothing which could prevent its coming up, but it would be then in the power of the Senate to do what it chose with it. The Senate did not make it a continuing order from day to day.

Mr. QUAY. I should be glad to have the RECORD read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The RECORD has been sent for.

Mr. LODGE. It is here on the Calendar.

Mr. QUAY. My recollection is different.

Mr. HALE. It is copied here on the Calendar.

Mr. QUAY. Let us see the original.

Mr. HALE (reading):

Thereupon the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] asked unanimous consent that on the tenth day, if the Senate is in session, and on the first day thereafter it may be in session if not on the tenth, the bill shall be made the unfinished business; and by unanimous consent the order was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The RECORD is now in the Senate, and if there be no objection the Secretary will read the RECORD.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be read.

The Secretary read from the proceedings of June 25, 1902, as follows:

Mr. QUAY. I desire to mention, Mr. President, in connection with the notice I gave yesterday that hereafter no business should proceed in the Senate by unanimous consent while I was present in the Senate, that I had no desire nor have the majority of the Senate, who are with me upon this subject, any desire, nor have the minority of the Committee on Territories any desire, if it can be at all avoided, to interfere with the ordinary conduct of business and a speedy adjournment. We desire nothing from the majority of the Committee on Territories except some assurance of a day in court. It matters not to us if the committee will report the statehood bill at this session negatively, or without recommendation, or favorably. I appeal to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] to say whether that can be done at the present session.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, as I stated the other day, the majority of the committee have already taken affirmative action looking to a consideration and report on the bill at an early day at the next session, and that resolution was made by the majority of the committee in perfect good faith. If what the Senator means is the fixing of a definite time early in the next session, I am willing to say that the committee will report on the bills now before it on the third day of the next session, if that is satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. QUAY. That is satisfactory so far as I am concerned, and I speak for at least the Republicans who are disposed to vote with me to discharge the committee. It will be satisfactory to all, I think, and I will withdraw my motion, if there is connected with it the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill on the 10th of December and make it the special order until disposed of.

Mr. ALDRICH. To make it the regular order, not a special order.

Mr. QUAY. Making it the regular order until disposed of.

Mr. BERRY. Making it the unfinished business.

Mr. QUAY. Making it the unfinished business until disposed of. The idea is to give it the right of way until we get rid of it. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to that arrangement, that it be made the unfinished business, and with that understanding I will withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana has stated in open Senate that the Committee on Territories will report on the bill referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania on the third day of the next session.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thereupon the Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that on the 10th day of December——

Mr. QUAY. If the Senate is not in session on the 10th, then on the next session of the Senate thereafter.

Mr. BATE. That is on Wednesday.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senate will be in session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senate is in session on that day, and if not the next day following when it is in session, the bill reported shall be made the unfinished business.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, in reply to what was said by the Senator from Pennsylvania, as he seems to speak for the other side of the Chamber, I desire to say for the Democrats on this side of the Chamber, and I feel authorized to do so—that we are a unit in favor of the bill and desire immediate action if we could get it. Now, it seems that we can not get immediate action, and failing in that, I hope the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania will be accepted. I am upon that Committee on Territories, being the first named among the Democrats upon it, and I feel that I can, with both propriety and authority, speak for them in this behalf. Therefore we accept the proposition, as we can get no vote on the bill this session. I repeat that every Democrat in the Senate favors immediate admission into statehood of the Territories of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico, and regret we can not get immediate action on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I intend, so far as I am concerned, to consent, but I consent, as one member of the Senate, because I think it is a fair proposition that a time should be fixed for considering the bill and not at all in view of the threat of the Senator that if this consent be not given the business of the Senate will be interfered with during the session. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not put it in that way.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Pennsylvania did not put it in that way. I did give notice that I would insist upon taking up the bill and at the proper time would use all parliamentary rights to secure a vote on it. That was the notice yesterday. It was simply fairly and openly made in the Senate, that I would do what was done yesterday under the eyes of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not referring to what the Senator said yesterday, but I referred to what he said a moment ago.

Mr. QUAY. I certainly conveyed no threat, but simply asked unanimous consent to consider the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the agreement been made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not. The Chair has been requested to restate it, and will state it again.

The Senator from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, has stated in open Senate to-day that the committee will report on the Territorial bill, so called, on the third day of the next session of Congress. Thereupon the Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that on the tenth day, if the Senate is in session, and on the first day thereafter it may be in session if not on the tenth, the bill shall be made the unfinished business.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 25, 1902, p. 7357.)

Mr. QUAY. Well, Mr. President, the reading of the RECORD shows that thrice within five minutes I stated the proposition that this bill being taken up was to be the special order until disposed of. It was certainly my understanding, and I have no doubt it was the understanding of the members of the Senate at that time that that course was to be taken. Either the President of the Senate in stating the agreement to the Senate or the RECORD reporters omitted that portion of the agreement; that is all there is of it.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, my recollection is very distinct that the Senator did propose, as stated, that the bill should not only be taken up, but kept before the Senate until finished; but objection to that arose, as the reading of the RECORD shows. I should not have given consent to that and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] would not have agreed to it; but we did agree that the bill should be made the unfinished business, leaving it in the power of the Senate to deal with it when it came up. Upon that the President pro tempore of the Senate three times stated the proposition as it was finally journalized and as it finally appears; and the Senator from Pennsylvania, whether or not he intended to do so, did not further insist upon adding continuous action to that request.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator has just made the statement that there was objection made to this proposition, but the Senator from Pennsylvania has shown by the RECORD that there was nothing of that sort in the RECORD.

Mr. QUAY. There was no objection.

Mr. HALE. The request was put as I have stated, and that was the reason there was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There was no objection, as shown by the RECORD; but the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] stated that the reason why he gave his assent to the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania was because we could not get an immediate vote on the bill. He at least understood the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania to mean that we should have a vote when the bill was taken up under the agreement; and there is not a word to the contrary in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. I should certainly not have assented to a unanimous-consent agreement that the bill should be any more than the unfinished business. It was clearly so stated and it was so journalized.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, we have heard the RECORD read and we know what it discloses. Whatever else may have been agreed upon, or may have been thought to have been agreed upon, it is made perfectly clear by this reading of the RECORD that the bill was made the unfinished business.

What is the meaning of "unfinished business?" Of course the Senate will have the right, if it sees fit to do so, to displace the unfinished business, but the unfinished business remains the business of the Senate until that is done.

I understood, I am frank to say, that at the time this agreement was entered into we made this matter not only the unfinished business, but we agreed that it should remain under consideration until disposed of. I got that impression from what the Senator from Pennsylvania so particularly stated. I was not aware at that time—and it has never been suggested until now—that "unfinished business" did not mean that a bill made the unfinished business should be before the Senate until the Senate disposed of it. Of course we can at any time cease to further consider it by voting it down, or otherwise disposing of it.

But it seems to me that the true intent of this agreement, as disclosed by the RECORD certainly—and that is fortified by the impression that I think Senators generally have—is that we made this bill the unfinished business, and that our agreement was to take it up and pursue its consideration until we finally disposed of it.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, it was certainly my understanding that the bill was to be taken up and considered until it was finished—until a vote had been had upon it. We were struggling to get a vote upon it. The object of the Senator from Pennsylvania in making the motion was to secure a vote on the bill. He had the right to press the motion to secure a vote on the bill, but he waived that right until the 3d of December arrived, which is to-day. There can be no question in my mind that that was the intention. I participated somewhat in that debate, and the statement of the case by the Senator from Pennsylvania was made twice in my hearing. It was then near the close of the session, and it was impossible to secure a final vote on the bill at that time.

I should like to have a construction of the language of the agreement by the Chair, as there seems to be a difference of opinion here, according to what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] says. Does it mean that the consideration of the bill shall only last one day, or that it shall continue until disposed of? I should like to have the opinion of the Chair as to what was agreed upon, because that will settle this question. The only question now, as I see it, arises from the fact that the Chair, in repeating the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania, left out from it the words "until concluded," as it was stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania two or three times. I should like to hear what the Chair has to say as to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will remain the unfinished business and be placed before the Senate every day at 2 o'clock, unless by a majority vote something else shall be made the unfinished business in its place.

Mr. BATE. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I recall very distinctly what transpired in the Senate at that time, and I also recall that there was a slight difference between the request as preferred by the Senator from Pennsylvania and the request as stated by the Chair. I remember also that I arose to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that he was not stating the request precisely as it had been submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania; but just as I rose to call attention to that fact the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] was recognized for the purpose of making the statement which the RECORD recites; then some one near me here inquired what I intended to do, or probably without any inquiry, I stated that there was a discrepancy between the statement as submitted by the Chair to the Senate and as preferred by the Senator from Pennsylvania. The general understanding here was that the request proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania would prevail. Still, the request for unanimous consent as finally proposed to the Senate by the Presiding Officer and consented to by the Senate omitted that important qualification.

Mr. HALE. I think, if the Senator will allow me, as his mind always runs very fairly, that he will see that it would be a very extreme case, almost never agreed to, where the Senate would tie itself up and declare that, whatever the Senate might want to do at a given time, it shall only consider one matter until it is ended. The majority, if it is a majority, or the Senator from Pennsylvania, gets everything that any side of this Chamber ought to ask in having a bill made the unfinished business which is before the Senate and continues before the Senate until the Senate says it will take up some other matter. That is a very great privilege. It is very much more than having a special order made. Any of us who have dealt in legislation and parliamentary law in the Senate have found that a bill being made a special order amounts to nothing; that gives it no precedence; it may be ignored and passed over by anything; but the utmost that is ever asked or ever ought to be asked is that a subject be made the unfinished business. There it holds its place until the Senate, which has the power, as it ought to have, says that something else shall take its place.

I can only speak for myself. I saw all of this at the time. I should never have consented that the proposition as originally submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania should have been agreed to so that we should tie ourselves up. Several Senators talked about it and said, "We can not agree to that." Finally, when the proposition was put, I clearly understood the Senator from Pennsylvania, when it was stated the last two times to the Senate, did not further make his point of having the bill continued from day to day; and upon that we all assented to the proposition. The RECORD is very clear. It is not very important, however, for if the Senator has the Senate with him he can hold this bill before the Senate ad infinitum.

Mr. CARMACK. But the question is, Did the Chair modify the request as originally preferred by the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Pennsylvania did not insist upon his original request.

Mr. CARMACK. Was the request made by the Senator from Pennsylvania the request put by the Chair, or had the Chair any right to put it in any other form than that in which it had been proposed?

Mr. HALE. Of course the RECORD is the thing which controls in this matter. This thing went as a great many things go. It was, as it frequently is, difficult to get a positive unanimous-consent agreement about considering this subject-matter. It was understood at the time and talked over by Senators; and when finally the Chair put the proposition without the added clause, and put it twice, the Senator from Pennsylvania did not insist. A Senator near me says it was not for us to understand what the Senator from Pennsylvania thought or what anybody else thought, but we did understand what the Chair said. It is so journalized, and it so appears in the RECORD, and I fancy nothing more can be done about it now. The Senator has got all the advantage, and if he has a majority of the Senate with him he can hold the bill before the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, with all due deference to my colleagues who know more about these matters than I do, it seems to me we are discussing a quibble. If unfinished business, as the Chair just announced, is not unfinished business, then what is the meaning of "unfinished business?" As the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has just said, if a majority of the Senate want to continue this as the matter under discussion the minority can not take it away from them, and it is a question merely of a majority voting this matter out of the Senate or leaving it before the body.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. TILLMAN. So we are wasting time.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this question, but I want some parliamentary information. A bill came from the House of Represenatives, and on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] that bill was made the special unfinished business for a certain day. Is that the bill which is now before the Senate? Is not this a different bill to accomplish only a part of the same purpose? Is not this a bill—as its title was read—which might probably be called a Senate bill to admit one State instead of three States, and to take different territory from that proposed to be taken by the bill from the House? Has the Senate consented to consider this bill as the unfinished business, or was it rather not a bill of an entirely different origin?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, some of us are very strongly opposed to this measure as it came from the other House, but we do not make any such point as that suggested by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. This agreement, which has been journalized, should apply to whatever bill the Committee on Territories report to the Senate. We make no point that the agreement does not apply to the subject-matter that will appear before us on the 10th of this month.

Mr. QUAY. I think, Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. There is no question before the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I think it is probable that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] are correct, that practically it makes no difference whether the agreement, as I stated to the Senate, is or is not enforced by the Senate and placed upon the record. I have no desire at all, nor is it the desire of any of the friends of this bill, to occupy the time of the Senate with the proposition unless the majority of the Senate favor it. We shall be ready at the earliest time we are permitted to do so to take a test vote upon the bill. If a majority of the Senate signify their disapproval of the omnibus bill as it came from the other House, so far as I am concerned, I will abandon it; and I shall be very glad to take that vote in some form or other on the first day the bill appears here in the Senate—the 10th of December.

As to the proposition of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], the bill is, in its present shape, the bill which came from the House, with the Senate committee amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a proposition to admit the Territory of Oklahoma, one of the three Territories which were provided for in the House bill, and adding to it the Indian Territory. It is the same bill practically with that amendment, and it will come before the Senate as the original omnibus bill and take its place. That is my understanding. The first question will be on the amendment reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not put the request made by the Senator from Pennsylvania in the form in which he originally proposed it, because if that request had been granted and the bill had been made a special order, any unfinished business would have displaced the special order. The Chair put the request which he supposed the Senator from Pennsylvania desired in the interest of the side he represented, and put it distinctly three times, so that if there had been any objection to it it could have been urged at the moment.

FIRST REGIMENT OHIO LIGHT ARTILLERY.

Mr. PENROSE obtained the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. PENROSE. For what purpose?

Mr. FORAKER. In order that I may make a motion for the appointment of a conference committee.

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator from Ohio for that purpose.

Mr. FORAKER. On one of the last days of the last session House bill 619 was considered by the Senate and passed with an amendment. The House has refused to concur in the amendment, has asked for a conference, and appointed conferees. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 619) providing for the recognition of the military service of the officers and enlisted men of the First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. FORAKER, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PENROSE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" appear to have it, and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to have the question again put on taking up the immigration bill.

Mr. PENROSE. The question was put and the Chair announced the decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia demand another vote?

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to have the question again put.

Mr. LODGE. What is the question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill known as the immigration bill, and the Chair will again put the question to the Senate. Will the Senate, on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the immigration bill? [Putting the question.] The "ayes" clearly have it, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for the purpose of considering the committee amendments.

Mr. BATE. Has that bill been printed and placed upon the tables of Senators?

Mr. PENROSE. The bill was printed last spring.

Mr. BATE. That is a long time ago.

Mr. LODGE. The bill was reported last spring, was placed on the Calendar, and has been there with the report of the committee ever since.

Mr. BATE. Then I presume we can get copies of the bill. I suppose nearly everybody has forgotten about the bill in the meantime.

Mr. PENROSE. It is a House bill, and is altered very little from the form in which it came from the House. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendments be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments reported to it by the Committee on Immigration shall first receive consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. Do I understand that under that proposition the bill will be read by sections for amendment?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. ELKINS. I want the bill read at length. I want to see what is in the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. The bill will be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia object to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]?

Mr. ELKINS. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the bill will be read in full.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I make the motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. ELKINS. I withdraw my objection, as the bill has to be read anyway, and I have now a copy of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments proposed by the committee shall first receive consideration? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Immigration with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, section 1, after the words "duty of," at the end of line 3, to strike out "$1.50" and insert "$3;" so as to read:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $3 for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States, or of the Dominion of Canada, the Republic of Cuba, or of the Republic of Mexico, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume the question is on that amendment. Am I correct, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee or some member of the committee touching the necessity for increasing the amount from $1.50 to $3. I want, furthermore, to ask, who is to pay this $3? I think under existing law the steamship companies are to pay it. Whilst I should judge from a casual reading of the first page of this bill that if this amount is increased and the bill is enacted into law as it stands, the railroads transporting passengers across the Canadian border, for instance, will have to pay $3 for each immigrant that they transport, I would ask the chairman if that is correct?

Mr. PENROSE. This increase would practically fall upon the transportation companies, as it does now. The amount was increased because of the fact that the duties and labor imposed upon the Immigration Bureau under this bill are considerably increased and consequently the expenses are increased. It is not a vital principle of the bill whether the per capita tax is $1.50 or $3. The provisions of the bill will be enforced whether the amount is fixed at one figure or the other.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, as the Senator will understand, it comes out of the alien passenger. It is all charged to him, as a matter of fact, now.

Mr. PENROSE. I imagine that matter can be left to adjustment between the two Houses when the bill goes into conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I think I can agree with the Senator on that proposition. At the same time, there should be a well-defined reason given why this amount is increased from a dollar and a half to $3, which is double the amount provided for in the House bill and double the amount that is now charged. I apprehend that we are not running in debt in this matter under existing law, and I do not think we ought to undertake to make money either out of the alien passengers or out of the transportation companies in a matter of this kind. I think I will agree with the Senator that the matter may be left to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The amendment will be agreed to in the absence of objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had not concluded my sentence, if the Chair will indulge me a moment.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield to the Senator when I conclude my sentence.

Mr. FORAKER. Is the bill now under consideration for amendment? A few moments ago when I went out of the Senate Chamber I understood the bill was taken up to be read for information. Now, if I correctly understood the statement from the Chair, we are considering the amendments to the bill with a view to adopting them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands, the present status of the bill is that it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the committee amendments are to be acted upon as they are reached in the reading.

Mr. PENROSE. There are some amendments here which the committee will ask to have rejected.

Mr. FORAKER. Those amendments can be passed over, of course, if we are not prepared to act upon them.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Do I understand that the bill is now being read for action upon the committee amendments and after they have been acted upon that other amendments will be in order?

Mr. LODGE. Exactly the same as is the case with every appropriation bill.

Mr. PENROSE. There is nothing unusual in the unanimous-consent agreement.

I will say for the benefit of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that I do not consider myself unalterably pledged to this amount of $3. I shall be glad to consider the matter in conference and to do what is fair and proper under the circumstances.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will now conclude my sentence, if I can recall just what I was saying when the Chair took me from the floor.

I think, under the circumstances, I will not make any contention over this matter, although I can not for the life of me see the necessity for it. I will, however, leave it to the careful consideration of the conference committee, and I am especially pleased to do so upon assurance of the chairman of the committee that he is not unalterably of opinion that this change ought to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the first amendment reported by the committee will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to call the attention of the Senator having the bill in charge to a matter wherein I have no doubt he will agree with me. It is a point on which I think the bill, possibly, is not quite clear. That is, whether it is intended to impose this tax upon the minor children or the wife of an alien already here who has declared his intention to become a citizen.

Mr. LODGE. That is the law now. The tax is now collected on every immigrant.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. I think it should not be collected on the wife or minor children of such an alien. The provision in section 3 is that such alien lawfully admitted here—may bring into the United States to join him as members of his family his wife, his children under 18 years of age, and his parents or grandparents over 50 years of age, if they are otherwise admissible, whether they are so able to read or not.

My proposition is that under our naturalization laws a person who has in good faith declared his intention to become a citizen has a right to have his wife and minor children become citizens, too, and that the tax should not be imposed on them.

Mr. PENROSE. I will state for the information of the Senator from Massachusetts that the suggestion he makes would be an alteration of existing law.

Mr. HOAR. It ought to be altered.

Mr. PENROSE. If he will prepare such an amendment as he has in mind, I feel safe, speaking for the Committee on Immigration, in saying that we shall be very glad to consider it carefully, and if it is found desirable to insert it in the bill we will recommend it.

Mr. HOAR. I think the proper place to put that amendment would be in the amendment already proposed as section 3. Where it says that an alien lawfully resident in the United States may bring into the United States his wife and minor children, it should provide that he may bring them in without such payment. The language here is——

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I should like to state my point.

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The alien who is here, with the authority or permission of the United States, on conducting himself properly for five years, to become an American citizen, and who is here in all respects conducting himself properly, ought not certainly to have such a tax put upon him. It is very hard on the immigrant to have a tax put on him in order to bring in his wife and minor children. We regard a person who has made his preliminary declaration as entitled to the national protection, so that the whole Army and the whole Navy are pledged to his protection. We settled that many years ago in the case of Martin Koszta, where we compelled an Austrian man-of-war to give him up, if I recollect aright the circumstances.

To levy a tax on such an alien to bring in his wife or children is an outrage. This immigration law, while it is popular in some quarters, contains enough in it, necessarily I dare say, for I am not criticising it, to constitute a pretty severe strain when we consider that after all the people who are coming in are human beings and not cattle, and to add to it the additional burden of imposing on a man who, for many purposes, is virtually a United States citizen if he comply with some conditions subsequent, a tax to bring in his wife and minor children seems to me utterly wrong.

Mr. PENROSE. I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts to prepare his amendment and offer it on the floor of the Senate, and I am sure we will give it every consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the Senate will.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senate will, too; but the committee would like to look into its effect and general scope.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the first amendment is formally adopted, I wish a little information.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit the amendment to be again reported? I was not in the Chamber when it was stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment now under consideration will again be stated for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in section 1, line 4, page 1, of the bill, to strike out the words "one dollar and fifty cents" and insert in lieu thereof "three dollars;" so as to read:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $3 for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the amendment go over. I should like a little time to look into it.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the amendment may be passed over.

Mr. PENROSE. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. HOAR. I think a more proper place to consider the suggestion I made, although it is pertinent here, is section 3, printed in italics on the sixth page, and if the Senator will kindly agree that that shall go over with the other I will be obliged to him.

Mr. LODGE. When we reach it.

Mr. HOAR. I mean when we reach it.

Mr. PENROSE. When we reach it.

Mr. HOAR. We will have the understanding, then, that it shall be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. LODGE. I ask permission of the chairman to insert a committee amendment. After the word "not," in line 5, page 1, I move to insert "a resident or."

Mr. PENROSE. I accept the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the amendment?

Mr. LODGE. The clause will then read:

For each and every passenger not a resident or a citizen of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. That will require looking after the Dominion of Canada. I suppose it is not proposed to except their residents who are not citizens.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. HOAR. You will have to change that also.

Mr. LODGE. Yes. The amendment ought to read:

Not a resident of the United States or a citizen of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "not," in section 1, line 5, page 1, it is proposed to insert "a resident or."

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend by inserting in section 1, page 1, after the word "Mexico," in line 6, the following:

Or inhabitants of the Philippine Archipelago.

My reason for that is this: At the last session of Congress we passed a law for the government of the Philippine Islands, in which we denominated and enacted that the people of those islands were citizens of the Philippine Islands. Well, they are nondescripts. There are no such people known in the world except them. There is no one who is a citizen of an island any more than there is a citizen of a corn crib or a stock house. We put those words in. Those people are not within the exception to this section although they belong to us in some fashion or another. We have a bill of sale for them under the Paris treaty, but we do not know whether they are slaves or citizens or subjects or what they are.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that the same thing is true of the residents of Porto Rico, as similar legislation has been had with reference to them.

Mr. MORGAN. Let it read "or inhabitants of the Philippine Archipelago or Porto Rico." I will put in those words.

Mr. LODGE. They are not alien immigrants.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, whatever else may be said as to the status of the Philippines and Porto Rico, it can not be said that their ports are foreign ports.

Mr. LODGE. They are not foreign ports.

Mr. FORAKER. The Supreme Court has decided that they are not foreign ports within the meaning of the revenue laws, and the reasoning and the conclusion I should think would be the same as to this matter. I call attention to the fact that the bill imposes this entrance fee only upon those who come as immigrants from foreign ports.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Connecticut will permit me for a moment, I wish to make a request with respect to this bill.

We have just assembled after a long vacation, and no one has had time, I take it, in the last day or two, in the hurry to which we have all been subjected, to read the bill and the report and the amendments as I should like to do before being called upon to act upon them. The bill has been taken up, and it can be taken up again to-morrow; and if the Senator who has the bill in charge would agree to let the bill go over until to-morrow, we should all have an opportunity to read the bill and the report and to study the questions raised by these amendments, and, as a result, we could act far more intelligently. I do not believe the Senator will make any substantial progress with the bill if he insists upon considering these amendments at the present time. In a hurried glance through the bill I observe quite a number of amendments on which I am not prepared to vote unless I can get light, as no doubt I would to some extent from their discussion. But it would be far more satisfactory to me and, I think, to Senators generally if we had time to read the bill and report and to know just what we were doing.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was about to inquire whether the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is in order at this time. It is not a committee amendment, and the order of the Senate was that the first reading of the bill should be dispensed with and the bill read for committee amendments.

Mr. MORGAN. No; it is to be read for amendments, committee amendments having preference.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think——

Mr. CULLOM. May I be allowed to say a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the Chair understands, for the purpose of considering amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. CULLOM. Considering them first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the bill has been read through and the committee amendments disposed of, individual amendments will be in order.

Mr. PENROSE. All I ask now, I will state for the information of the Senator from Ohio, is that the reading of the bill shall be proceeded with for the purpose of considering the very few amendments proposed to the bill as it passed the House. I shall not press it any further to-day.

Mr. FORAKER. But the amendments proposed——

Mr. LODGE. Any amendment can be passed over, but we can dispose of a great many formal amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. I am willing to pass over any amendment as to which question is raised.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If I can get the floor for a moment, I wish to state that I fully agree with the Senator from Ohio. This is an important bill, and it is also important to know what the amendments are which have been proposed by the committee. I venture to say that no Senator has read this bill, certainly not until it was taken up, and if since, only in the most cursory manner, and no Senator is prepared to vote on the amendments. Some of them are extremely important, and we ought to have a little time to consider this matter before it is taken up and we are asked to vote upon these amendments.

I do not know any reason why we should be hurried in this way with the pending bill. I believe every Senator desires to improve our immigration laws, so far as they can be improved, but every Senator ought to know just what we are doing and he ought to have the opportunity to know it.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. If that is the opinion of several Senators, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may now go over, to come up for consideration immediately after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow morning.

Mr. SPOONER. I rose for the purpose of inquiring how the bill got before the Senate to-day.

Mr. LODGE. On motion.

Mr. CULLOM. It was taken up on motion.

Mr. PENROSE. On motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By a vote of the Senate. The senior Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bill may go over until to-morrow, to be taken up immediately after the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire of the Chair, although I suppose there is no doubt about it, whether when the committee amendments are considered amendments to them will be in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands. Is there objection to the request made by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none, and the bill will go over temporarily until to-morrow.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVES DE GRAFFENREID AND SHEPPARD.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives relative to the death of Representatives DE GRAFFENREID and SHEPPARD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions indicated by the Senator from Texas, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 2, 1902.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. R. C. DE GRAFFENREID, late a Representative from the Third Congressional district of Texas, and of Hon. JOHN L. SHEPPARD, late a Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of Texas.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be communicated to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of these deceased members the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I move, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased members of the House, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 4, 1902, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 3, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. SHEPPARD of Texas to be a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. RUMPLE until after the holiday recess, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. By the order of the House of yesterday, after the approval of the Journal, the House was to go into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of House bill 15372.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess for ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the House was in recess until 12 o'clock and 15 minutes.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

VISITORS TO THE UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER announced the following appointments:

Visitors to the Naval Academy: Mr. JAMES E. WATSON, Mr. ROBERT ADAMS, and Mr. CHAMP CLARK.

Committee to visit the Military Academy: Mr. J. A. T. HULL, Mr. GEORGE W. STEELE, and Mr. D. A. DE ARMOND.

ANTHRACITE COAL STRIKE COMMISSION.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider House bill 15372.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 15372, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15372. A bill to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the bill is short, and I suggest that it be reported in full.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of such expenses as have been, or may be, incurred by the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission in the performance of its duties, such commission having been appointed by the President to "inquire into, consider, and pass upon the questions in controversy in connection with the strike in the anthracite region and the causes out of which the controversy arose," and for such compensation of the seven members of said commission, its employees, and the two assistant recorders as may be fixed by the President, such compensation to be paid notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1763, 1764, and 1765 of the Revised Statutes, or section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, chapter 328.

A disbursing agent for the commission is hereby authorized, and the expenses and compensation herein provided for shall be paid by him on vouchers certified by the recorder and approved by the chairman of the commission, and the accounting officers of the Treasury shall credit the said disbursing agent with the amounts so certified and paid.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment and have it read and considered as pending.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to having it read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order except by unanimous consent. General debate is now in order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Under the ruling of the Chair yesterday, I understood——

Mr. CANNON. It will be in order, let me say to my friend, under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I simply wish to have it read and considered as pending.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to its being read, as far as I am concerned, for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the amendment will be read for the information of the committee.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it further resolved, That all import duties on anthracite coal containing less than 90 per cent of fixed carbon be, and the same are hereby, abolished, and on and after the passage of this resolution all such anthracite coal imported into the United States shall be admitted free of all duty or tax.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose the eleventh commandment might be read for the information of the committee also. [Laughter.] I do not care to consume any time in general debate myself at this time, but I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what is his desire upon that subject.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will say that I do not desire to use time myself, but I ask the gentleman from Illinois to permit the minority of the Committee on Appropriations to take charge of the time. Mr. BENTON, of Missouri, has signified to me a desire to make some remarks on the bill, and I also understood that the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. LIVINGSTON, would like some time.

Mr. CANNON. I will reserve my time, Mr. Chairman, and ask my friend from Georgia how much time he wants?

Mr. BENTON. The gentleman from Georgia does not seem to be here at the present time.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will ask my friend from Missouri if he suggests any time for general debate, or does he desire to be recognized and take such time as he chooses?

Mr. BENTON. I desire to be recognized, and I do not think I want over ten minutes. Mr. Chairman, I stated in the committee when this bill was brought up for consideration that I would not vote for it. I thought it was proper to the majority of the committee, and especially to the chairman, who was to report it, to give notice before it was reported that I would not vote for it. If the bill was presented to the House of Representatives in a regular way, authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission for this purpose, I am of opinion that I would vote for it. I did vote for a bill last spring somewhat along this line.

As I say, if as an original proposition the bill was before this House authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission to arbitrate between the operators and the miners, I am of opinion I would vote for it. There is no man more anxious to see capital and labor get along without a row than am I. This particular bill authorizes the President of the United States to control in his own way $50,000 in money to pay a commission and its officers already appointed by him and at work. In the first place, there is no authority that I know of, statutory or constitutional, permitting the President to make any such commission.

If this bill was creating this commission, or giving the President power to appoint it, and appropriating this money to pay the commission, I think I should vote for it. My objection is not to the commission or its work, but is to appropriating money from the public Treasury to pay a body of men appointed by the President without any legal warrant, and when such body of men are unable to exercise any legal authority or make effective any of their conclusions, and until the President has legal authority to make such commission, and their decisions can be binding, I do not feel disposed to vote for this character of bill. If the President of the United States has the right to appoint this commission without authority of law, I see no reason why he has not the right to appoint a commission to settle reciprocal trade relations between this Government and Germany, or any other kind of a commission that might seem good to him.

I know that to call attention to the Constitution is to put one's self in the rôle of a "back number." Nevertheless, I have been so educated as to have some respect in my own mind for the Constitution and the law, and in spite of the times, and lack of respect for law, I believe in constitutional and legal authority for all acts of the people's servants.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman think that under the then existing circumstances the President ought to have waited till Congress convened to pass some law authorizing this commission?

Mr. BENTON. I think that if the President wanted such authority it would not have taken very long to convene Congress and call its attention to this matter.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman think that Congress ought to have been convened to enable the President to take this action?

Mr. BENTON. I think the President ought not to have acted without the authority of law. That answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman think that the President in acting as he did acted wrong?

Mr. BENTON. I think the President acted without authority of law; and when he does that he acts wrongly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But do you think that the President ought to have waited until Congress had taken action on the question?

Mr. BENTON. I have answered your question directly and positively—that without the authority of law the President had no right to appoint such a commission.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But do you think that the President acted wrong?

Mr. BENTON. Exactly; when he acts without authority of law he acts wrongfully.

Mr. HEMENWAY. When he promptly brought about a settlement of this strike, which had resulted in such great suffering to the people of the United States, do you think the President was mistaken in that action?

Mr. BENTON. Oh, the gentleman now wants to inject a speech here. That may be all right; but I think he had better make it in his own time, especially as he assumes that the President has brought about a settlement, which he has not done. The gentleman asked me a question, and I have answered it—that when the President acts without law, then, like any other man who acts without authority of law, he acts wrongfully. That is my answer to the question.

I have stated my first and most serious objection to this bill—that there is no authority for the appointment of the commission. My second objection is that it is proposed here to put $50,000 into the hands of the President without any sort of limitation upon his right to expend the money in such manner as seems to him good. If we are to pay members of this commission and their secretaries and to pay the other expenses of this proceeding, there ought to be a specific sum set apart for that business, and we should know how much each person is to receive and for what service. That is my opinion about the matter. There should not be a lump sum appropriated—$50,000, $20,000, $100,000, nor any other sum should be appropriated with no limitation whatever upon the manner in which the President is to expend the money. I am opposed to the bill for that reason, too.

I am opposed to it for another reason. Four members of this commission are now serving the United States Government on salaries. There is a law now permitting men who are serving the Government on salaries and who are given extra work to do to receive a certain compensation in addition to their salaries. I do not think that this bill ought to set aside laws already on the statute book in any such way as is done by the second provision of this bill. Those are my objections to the bill. Those are the reasons I can not vote for it.

I say again, as I said at the beginning, that I think arbitration a wise way to settle this disturbance, and I think that the personnel of this commission is perhaps as good as could have been found by the President for this purpose. I believe that the American people desire a settlement of this unfortunate strike, but I also believe that the President and this commission, like all other people in this country, ought to be subject to law, and when we propose to give money to pay the salaries and expenses of this commission certain sums ought to be set apart for specific purposes and a lump sum ought not to be given. In other words, we should legalize this commission first, and pay each member of it a stated sum and the expenses of the body, and no one of them should be paid in violation of established law. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON], our colleague, has an hour.

Mr. BENTON. I stated that I reserved the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will take the floor and yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] if he desires.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Just for a moment.

Mr. CANNON. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Five or ten minutes.

Mr. BENTON. The gentleman from Georgia was not here when we opened. Of course he can have whatever time he wants.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably absent when the House opened.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Missouri yield to his colleague, the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BENTON. I shall turn over my time to the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia take the floor in his own right?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, while some of the objections urged by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] may look plausible and under ordinary circumstances, perhaps, ought to have the attention of the House, I simply wish to say this, that under the circumstances I believe the repeal of the statute forbidding a person having two salaries to be pardonable, if not justifiable, and certainly the conditions of the country at the time justified the President in doing what he did without authority. Of course he had no law. Of course he had no authority to appoint this commission, but there was an emergency upon the country. It was a serious condition, and what he did he did with the best of motives, and I think that this side of the House had better stand by the bill and vote for it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman says he thinks that probably the statute prohibiting two salaries to be drawn by one person should be repealed for this purpose. Will the gentleman state his reasons for thinking there is such a probability?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes. In answer to that question, Mr. Chairman, the duties to be performed by these three gentlemen on this commission who are receiving a salary at the hands of the Government are not only arduous and trying, but extraordinarily so. That is the reason why I think that in this instance we might just as well vote for this measure and let this be an exception to the rule. They are duties which every member on this floor, if he will think for just a moment, would not want to perform. They have to go down into those mines; they have to examine in detail everything there; they take their lives in their own hands when they do it. That is the reason why I would suggest in this instance this be granted. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to know what reason the gentleman from Georgia can give for Congress delegating an authority to the President to fix the salaries of the gentlemen who serve on this commission? We have plenty of time; we have nothing else to do, particularly just now at the beginning of the session. Why can not Congress go on and fix the exact pay that each of the members of this commission ought to receive?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The answer to that question is simply this: That there is not a member on this floor who knows the amount of work and the kind of work in detail that these commissioners have to perform, and nobody can know it fully until the work has been completed. It has been left to the President for that reason, I presume.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman if Congress has not the same means of ascertaining in detail the work that they do which the President has?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I suppose Congress has; if we wait long enough to get it, we can get it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Would it not be judicious at least to wait until it can be known definitely exactly what has been rendered by these gentlemen on the commission?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why, Mr. Chairman, it would take months and months. This session would have passed away and the Fifty-eighth Congress would be in life; and then I do not know whether or not we could ascertain it satisfactorily to all on the floor of the House. One can see the difficulty in getting that kind of information and the difficulty in this House agreeing, if we ever get it, as to what ought to be done.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman if he will yield me five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. In a moment I will, yes. Do I understand——

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If I yield to the gentleman five minutes he can ask the question at that time.

Mr. BARTLETT. I shall not ask the gentleman to yield five minutes if I may be permitted to ask the question. Congress has already passed a law which provides for the settlement of strikes between employer and employees of railroads engaged in interstate-commerce business, and in passing that law has fixed the salaries of the arbitrators and provided for the payment of the expenses and how they should be paid.

Now, why not? Would it not be a good rule to follow to adopt the statute as to the amount of pay and the manner of paying both the salary and the expenses which Congress has already provided in case of arbitration between employers and employees upon the railroads engaged in interstate commerce?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I think I have answered that question. I will repeat my answer.

Mr. BARTLETT. I heard the gentleman's answer.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The kind of work and the conditions and surroundings of this commission are perhaps different from any work that has ever been done by any commission, or by any set of men, for the Government, and for that reason perhaps the rule that the gentleman refers to would not be a liberal one in this instance.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the gentleman think $10 a day, exclusive of traveling expenses and hotel bills, would be sufficient pay for the gentlemen of this commission? This bill which establishes an arbitration law between railroad employer and employee provides for $10 a day. Does not the gentleman think that Judge Gray and these other gentlemen, who already draw five or six thousand dollars a year from the Government, if they get $10 a day and all their expenses in addition to that, would be receiving sufficient compensation; and does not the gentleman think that Congress had better fix that now than to leave it to be determined by the President?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, there is no ten-dollar proposition before the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have an amendment which I propose to offer.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That may be. It may come before the House; and when it comes, if I have an opportunity, I will express myself on it; but I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] a question. I understand that he yielded time to me. Is that correct, or am I speaking in my own right?

Mr. BENTON. I thought you were on my side of the case. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] five minutes, and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I intend to vote for this bill, and, as I see there is some difference of opinion, I desire to have the RECORD show why I intend to vote for the bill.

At the time that this arbitration was first suggested I thought that possibly it was a dangerous proposition for the President of the United States to engage in, considering that he had no authority to enforce his desires in the settlement of this strike or the carrying on of this arbitration and that possibly he might bring a loss of prestige to his great office; but I desire to congratulate the President of the United States and the country on the fact that, notwithstanding the dangerous position in which he was placed, he succeeded in bringing about a settlement of the most dangerous and distressing strike that has ever occurred in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not see that there is any question of law involved in this case. I do not know that anyone contends that there was warrant of law behind the President's action. He did not so contend. I merely understand that the great mass of the people of the United States were desirous of having this strike settled, because on the one hand it was bringing distress to the homes of the laborers, and on the other hand it was bringing distress into the homes of thousands of the people of the North; and under those circumstances it was suggested that arbitration might produce the remedy desired.

Arbitration is not a question of law. Arbitration itself steps beyond the law, and the President, of course, was not resting on law when he asked these parties to come together and agree to an arbitration of their difficulties. He did not contend that he had the right of law when he asked that these gentlemen should act as arbitrators, should come in here and settle these differences. It was a mutual agreement between the contending parties.

There is no question of double salaries here. There is no question of salaries at all. Here are a number of gentlemen who voluntarily, at the request of the President of the United States, gave their time and their labor to the settling of a difficult problem. Now, the question before the Congress of the United States is not one of carrying out law. It is a question as to whether, when these men have rendered a great public service, we shall say to them, "You shall spend your time and your money and pay your own expenses in working for the public without compensation," or whether the great Government of the United States shall say, "You have done well, and we will not let you be at a personal loss." That is all there is in this bill, and therefore I think these gentlemen ought to be paid for their time and for their expenses. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of asserting that the gentlemen engaged in the settlement of this anthracite coal strike should not be paid and liberally paid. I do not rise for the purpose of questioning the act of the President in appointing this commission, while I might do so with good reason. I think he acted as a patriotic American citizen, and I think he deserves the thanks of the American people for what he did in endeavoring to bring to an end that most disastrous state of affairs which existed when this commission was appointed.

I think that not only the President, but the great head of the labor organizations, John Mitchell, who aided him in bringing about a cessation of this strike, deserves the indorsement and approbation of the people of the United States; and I also believe that the men who fought so long to prevent a settlement, the coal operators—the coal barons—deserve the condemnation of the American people for what they did in delaying so long the settlement of the strike. But it is not just to the President, just to the American people whose money we spend, it is not just to ourselves, that we shall pass bills like this, indefinite in amount and not providing what shall be paid these men engaged in doing this work, and without fixing the amount, or a limit to it. Doubtless the President will do that which is proper, doubtless he will not pay them any more than they should receive; but it is the duty of Congress; and because it is the duty of Congress to see to it that the people's money is expended in a manner that they shall direct, I shall offer an amendment fixing the compensation to be paid.

Now, Congress already has had the matter of fixing the pay for arbitrators up before it. Congress, in 1898, passed a law, approved June 1, 1898, known as the "arbitration law," to arbitrate differences between employer and employee of the great railroads in the country engaged in interstate commerce. It provides how that shall be done. Of course, there was nothing in it to compel the arbitration of the differences between labor and capital; that could not be done. But it provided how the arbitration could be had, fixed how the arbitrators should be appointed, how they could carry on the business and determine the differences, how they could make an award, and how that award could be enforced in the United States courts, giving the sanctity and validity of a judgment of the courts; and that law, which most of us who were here then voted for—I believe it passed almost unanimously; I voted for it, and I believe almost everyone else did—that law provided for and fixed the compensation of the arbitrators.

Now, why may we not do the same? Is there anything so sacred about the body or personality of these gentlemen who constitute this arbitration board appointed by the President that the Congress of the United States may not say how much they shall receive? Are they above the Congress of the United States? Three of them already receive salaries from the Treasury of the United States—one as circuit court judge, one as the Commissioner of Labor, and one as a retired Army officer. Now, I think it is bad policy to repeal a law now upon the statute book, which provides that men shall not receive double pay for their services, and the legislative mind and bent has been against permitting that to be done. It ought not to be done.

The gentleman from Georgia, my colleague [Mr. LIVINGSTON], has served for years on a commission known as the Industrial Commission, and so have members of this House and the Senate, without a dollar's compensation. I do not ask that in this case, but I do think and insist, and shall offer an amendment at the proper time to that effect, that members of this commission shall receive a compensation of $10 per day for the time actually employed and their traveling and other necessary expenses, to be ascertained as now provided in this bill we are now considering. On this commission are Judge Gray, Mr. Wright, and General Wilson, who are already receiving salaries from the Government, and other distinguished and patriotic gentlemen. I think that they ought to be patriotic enough to be content with the same pay as would be paid to arbitrators who should settle the differences between railroad companies and their employees. It certainly is as large a salary as the ordinary American citizen would be content to receive—$10 a day and expenses—and I think we ought to fix it at that before the bill leaves the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, the action of the President in reference to the great strike in Pennsylvania is not unprecedented. In several States, when great labor controversies have occurred, governors have acted similarly. This was recently done by the governor of Missouri. Such action on the part of an executive, State or National, can not be regarded as essentially official, and therefore no constitutional question is involved. It is natural, however, that the public should look to the Chief Executive for any aid within his power in matters so important, and altogether commendable when an effort is made to meet this just expectation.

Therefore the country approves the action of the President and commends him for securing a settlement of the Pennsylvania coal strike.

In my opinion few entertain the opinion that his action is to be regarded as something prescribed by the Constitution or laws or as in any sense official. He followed the example of governors, mayors, and eminent divines who, in similar situations, at divers times, have volunteered their services.

By the passage of this bill we merely approve of this unofficial action of the President, and signify the opinion that the matter involved is one so important, and the work of the commission one in which the whole country is so vitally interested, that it is right that the public Treasury should foot the bills.

I agree with my colleague [Mr. BENTON] that the bill is objectionable in form, and hope that he or some other member of the Appropriation Committee who agrees with me will give us an opportunity to vote for amendments prohibiting those members of the commission who are now in the public service from drawing two salaries, and at least subjecting them to the general statutes covering cases where extraordinary duties are imposed on the servants of the country.

The gentleman from Georgia says the duties of the commissioners are very arduous. Yes; and the salaries they are receiving are proportionately large. I do not believe their new duties are so oppressive that under the general statutes their compensation will not be all that they deserve.

For the President or any other executive officer to have at his disposal large sums of money to be expended according to his own personal discretion, paying such sums as he may see fit to his appointees, is a vicious practice, and one that sooner or later will lead to scandal and misfortune.

Therefore I do not believe it is a sound policy to make such appropriations. Recent history justifies this criticism, for under laws permitting this kind of expenditures we have seen a governor-general of Porto Rico living in the splendor of an Indian prince, with a Government yacht at his disposal, with a palace for a residence, and enjoying revenues three times as large as the salary of the Chief Justice of the United States. The same scandalous system has prevailed also in the Philippine Islands and in Cuba. I hope amendments will be offered covering these points, so that we may have an opportunity to vote upon a bill providing for payment of the expenses of the commission without lending seeming approval to the obnoxious features I have mentioned.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FEELY].

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, intending as I do to vote for this bill, I ask the indulgence of the House to make a few suggestions expressing my opinion upon it.

No one can gainsay the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] that the President of the United States acted without express or implied authority under the Constitution in what he did; but it certainly was an extraordinary occasion; and if he did not have the mandate of the Constitution supporting him, he certainly had the mandate of the united public opinion of the people of the United States. Granted that he had no legal authority, the acts of the arbitration commission were not intended to have any legal sanction. But it remains for us by our action upon this bill to place the stamp of approval or ratification upon his action in constituting this commission.

For myself, I am in favor of liberal compensation for the arbitrators, and while I agree with the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri that there ought to be a limit and determination upon that compensation fixed by this House, I will not be at all niggardly in insisting upon that limitation. I am satisfied for myself to leave to the integrity and the discretion that was able to pick out a commission of such a grand personnel the duty of determining what the compensation of the arbitrators should be.

It seems to me that all the people of the United States are interested in placing the formal and legal ratification of the action of Congress upon that act of the President of the United States. I think, Mr. Chairman, that representing, as I believe I do, a district that has in it more men who are affiliated with organized labor than any other district in the United States, I am voicing their sentiments when I say that I shall vote here upon this bill in favor of the ratification of the action of the President and in favor of recognizing the great ability of the arbitrators by voting them a respectable and decent compensation for their services given to the whole people of the United States.

I believe that out of the work of this commission and its report will come a new era in unionism, and that capital and labor will be brought more clearly to recognize the positions which they hold relatively to each other in society. It is with great pleasure that I state my intention to support this bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is admitted by some of my colleagues on this side of the House who oppose this bill that as an original proposition Congress could have created this commission. It is admitted that the President has committed no moral wrong, no criminal act, in this matter. The effect of this bill when enacted will be to ratify what you might term an unauthorized act; an act performed, not by the President (because not empowered as President to perform such an act), but by Mr. Roosevelt, because he was, when thus acting, President. As an individual he failed—but he implored the controlling spirit to intervene and stop the trouble and negotiate for at least peace and a suspension of bloodshed.

As a result, coal is being furnished the people, though in inadequate amounts; yet with winter on this is better than none. We have peace, no bloodshed, some coal, and peaceful negotiations pending.

The question being considered by this commission involves, in part at least, interstate commerce; hence Congress could have created this commission while the public is enjoying the fruits of the President's labors. On these grounds I shall support this bill.

Mr. Chairman, as a matter of public policy I am opposed to an officer receiving more than one salary, unless authorized by law, but who will for a moment say, for instance, that the duties of Judge Gray, as one of these commissioners, are not a thousandfold more arduous, laborious, far-reaching, and oppressive to him mentally and physically than the labor he performs when sitting on the woolsack with a salary of $5,000 a year.

So, while I demur to the proposition unauthorized by law, rather than that this bill should fail, I will support even that. These commissioners can not work for nothing. If they stop working, this "strike," this "controversy," this "crisis" may be reopened with horrible results.

Mr. Chairman, I want to go a little further. I want to show the governor of Pennsylvania is, in a great measure at least, to blame for this trouble. He has flagrantly failed to enforce the laws of Pennsylvania.

On October 13 last a distinguished Republican Senator, Mr. SPOONER, in a speech, in speaking of this anthracite trouble, said:

The coal combination is one, gentlemen, which exists in violation of the constitution of the State of Pennsylvania, which prohibits any railroad company from owning or operating coal mines. If that constitutional provision has not been enforced, it is not the fault of the Republican party in the United States; it is the fault of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

"The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania." What did the Senator here mean? He meant the governor of Pennsylvania, if no more.

Mr. Chairman, I am willing here to rescue the people from the results of the delinquent acts of the governor of Pennsylvania, Mr. Stone, whose voice I have heard in defense of trusts and combinations on the floor of this House.

Here is this great Senator and gifted lawyer who denounces "the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania," which means the governor of that State, whose duty it is under oath to enforce the constitution and laws of that State, regardless of individuals. One of the main causes of this trouble has been the nonenforcement of this constitution that Governor Stone was sworn solemnly to uphold and enforce. He is at fault for not enforcing the antitrust laws of that great State.

The effect of this trouble has been felt all over this Republic. It is a fact that to-day in the city of Washington people with money to buy can not buy coal. It is a fact that yesterday we were heating this House with wood instead of coal, and why? It is not to be had, because of this trouble, in the main. But conditions could have been worse had not the President kindly and patriotically intervened, and we should in legal bounds stand by him.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Cnairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, while I do not think the raising of this Commission was authorized by law, and while I thought, and still think, it operated to bring about political advantage, if not so intended at the time, yet it is conceded on all sides that the gentlemen contributing to the movement have performed a great public service; and although I am a partisan among partisans and, to my regret, seldom find anything good to commend in the action of the other side, yet I can not oppose the proposal for our Government to requite and indemnify those who have so signally promoted the public good.

I believe in arbitration as a remedy for strikes in all cases where this Government can constitutionally provide for arbitration. While arbitration can not make contracts, but must ordinarily confine its operation to construing contracts, yet Federal conditions, legislative and otherwise, often assume aspects analogous and equivalent to contractual status and both justify and demand adjustment of differences.

In addition to controversies arising in interstate commerce, which Congress has constitutional authority to control, where similar controversies arise in any enterprise in this country in which protection as a bounty or bonus granted by this Government is a controlling element in the profits, Federal arbitration should control and settle such disputes, because where a government creates a bounty, whether contributing directly from its own treasury or providing for its exaction from the people, it is a bounty provided by the government, and the government, without doubt being entitled to administer its own bounty, should see that there is a fair participation and division of the profits and benefits of its largess between capital and labor.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that when the eminent gentlemen concerned entered upon this enterprise they knew it was not provided for by law. I do not believe that one of them charged a cent against the Treasury of the United States. On the contrary, I presume that each one of them stands willing to answer for his own responsibility and defray his own expenses, if provision be not otherwise made. But this great Government can not afford to ignore the fact and magnitude of the situation and leave to their own loss and expense the gentlemen who have embarked in this great and beneficent work.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] such time as he desires to consume.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, the cobwebs ought all to be brushed away from this controversy. Here was a great strike going on, the greatest in the history of the United States. People all over the country were being assessed to pay the cost of this strike, and in every mining district in the United States men who needed the money for the support of their own families were being assessed to support the strikers in Pennsylvania. There seemed to be no end to it. On the one hand Mr. Mitchell, on the side of labor, was contending for one proposition; on the other hand the railroads and operators were contending for another proposition. They could not be brought together. Great factories were being closed because there was no coal supply, and it looked as though distress were going to reach all over the country and industry be paralyzed. But in place of acting the part of some of my Democratic friends and talking about the matter, the President of the United States did as the Republican Presidents always do—he acted, and went to work to settle the strike. His action brought about this commission. A commission was appointed. Some of our friends on the other side seemed to think that the President ought to have hunted around for some men who would work for $10 a day and fix some price at which these men should perform the services they had to perform, but the President of the United States was not hunting for cheap men. He was hunting for the best men he could find to form a commission to settle the strike. The question of pay did not enter his mind for a moment. It was simply a question of finding men with brains and ability sufficient to handle this great strike which was in progress.

He found them, or at least he thought he found them, and appointed seven men, all of high character, all well known to the people of the United States. One of them was Carroll D. Wright, who happens to be in office now. Who could have selected a better man than Carroll D. Wright to aid in the settlement of this strike?

This commission was appointed. The whole country applauded the action of the President. Everybody in these United States was glad that the President had brought about a settlement of this strike. The miners went to work again, coal began to be produced again, and in place of disaster and factories shutting down we see prosperity continuing and everybody in the country happy except a few nine-by-ten politicians, and I am glad to know that there are very few of them in the United States who are sorry that the strike was settled at the time it was settled.

Now, it simply remains for the Congress of the United States to put the seal of its approval upon the action of the President. The people of the country have already put their seal of approval upon it, and everybody all over the country applauds the courage of Theodore Roosevelt in going to work to settle this strike as he did. There ought not to be any controversy here about the question whether a man shall have $2 a day, or $5 a day, or $25 a day. The President can settle that question, and I have no doubt, from the character of men who serve upon this commission, that the question will be settled properly, and that the Treasury of the United States will not be looted by these distinguished gentlemen who have been appointed on this commission. It is a question that ought not to be discussed here at this time. This House ought promptly, within the next thirty minutes, to pass this bill by a unanimous vote, and thus approve the patriotic and courageous action of Theodore Roosevelt in so promptly settling this great strike. [Applause.]

Mr. CORLISS. Before the gentleman takes his seat I wish to ask him a question. I desire to call his attention to the language of the bill. I am very heartily in favor of the bill, but I think it ought to provide that this commission shall complete its work. The language of the bill does not make it obligatory upon the commission to inquire into and ascertain all the facts and report the facts to Congress or to the President, whether a settlement is made or not, and I submit that the language of the bill leaves it in such a way that should the operators and the miners agree between themselves the commission would be powerless to go on and report the facts, and that this language would leave the commission without power, and that the people would be without the information that they should have in reference to this matter. The public are interested. I ask the gentleman if his attention has been called to the language of the bill?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest to the gentleman that all these questions can be met in the future as we come to them. It is the duty of Congress now promptly to pass this bill, and to provide the means to pay the expenses of this commission in their work.

Mr. CORLISS. Do you not admit that the language of the bill does not require a report?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I want to say to the gentleman that if we go into all these details at this time, and undertake to look into the future and to ascertain all the questions that may arise in reference to this matter, we shall not reach any conclusion during this Congress.

Mr. CORLISS. Are not the committee willing that when Congress appropriates $50,000 it shall have a report from the commission?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, certainly, we shall have a report.

Mr. CORLISS. Then why not put it in the bill and provide that we shall have a report and some information upon the subject?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] five minutes.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, this is no time to discuss the merits of the great coal strike. The fact remains that 147,000 workingmen laid down their tools and for more than five months remained out of employment. The further fact remains that during that time these men, after consuming the earnings that they had accumulated, were supported by their fellow-workmen in other parts of the United States. Let me say in behalf of those workingmen, in Iowa, at least, that they had contracts running until next April. They stood by their contracts and refused to go into a strike, but gave 10 per cent of their gross earnings to support their brethren who were engaged in this struggle in Pennsylvania. Coal rose in value, and yet these men continued under their annual contract to work at the same old price. It was an unfortunate affair, which deprived many families of adequate support for all those months. Demand was made in many quarters for an extra session of Congress. One party in a great State in the Union, in a political convention assembled, declared in favor of State socialism in the coal-mining business as a remedy for the strike.

Mr. FLEMING. Declared in favor of national ownership.

Mr. LACEY. Not only State ownership, but national ownership.

Mr. FLEMING. And that was worse still.

Mr. LACEY. That was socialism in its wildest form. In this acute situation the President of the United States did one of the boldest acts ever performed by a National Executive. He called together the contesting parties, called attention to the sufferings of the consumers, of the people who were not parties to this controversy, and asked the operators and miners to agree to an arbitration. The effort for a time was unsuccessful.

But arbitration followed later on. In a tactful way success was brought about, and the arbitration is now going on. Congress would have unhesitatingly, if in session at the time, have made provision for the expenses of such an arbitration. Now, when it has come together, it is fitting that the first act of the session should be a recognition and approval of the President's action in this matter. So, Mr. Chairman, I am glad to see there seems to be no politics in this House upon this question, and that fairly and honestly both sides are ready to back up the Executive in this wise performance of duty on his part. I do not mean his official duty, for he only acted in an unofficial way, but a duty cast upon him in the great position to which the American people called him, and I trust that even my friend from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] on the Democratic side, who has spoken against this bill, will yield to the views of his colleagues, so that we may have a unanimous vote in favor of this measure. The adjustment of so great a question by arbitration marks an epoch in our industrial history. It should be treated as above and beyond party politics.

Mr. CANNON. I reserve my time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT].

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, the question of the amount to be paid to the arbitration commission is of little consequence when it is considered in its relation to the great interests involved. It is hardly worth while spending a moment upon it; but I want to suggest to the committee that reported this bill that it has gone but a single step, and that in the most inefficient direction. The commission was not appointed by the President of the United States acting as such. It was appointed by the incumbent of the office of President and receives its dignity because of the high station of the gentleman who made the appointment.

During the closing hours of the last session of this House there was under debate a bill, reported by the Labor Committee, which provided that wherever there existed or was threatened a difference between labor and capital affecting interstate commerce the President of these United States should have the right to appoint a commission; that on the part of the employers there should be suggested one, that on the part of the employees there should be suggested another, and accepting these two as members of the commission, the President should add five. That commission was to be given power. Your commission to-day is absolutely without power. It is a commission of suggestion by the President, and in the performance of all its duties it is merely a commission of suggestion.

That bill provided that the power of the courts of this country should be used, that process should issue, that the men appointed to arbitrate, or rather to investigate, should have power to obtain the information necessary to present to the great forum of public opinion their views concerning the differences between capital and labor. That bill was reported unanimously by the Labor Committee. It was drawn in the light of the then threatened extension of a strike that had been in existence for six weeks, and in advocating it I said on the floor of this House that unless power was given to intervene and present to the people of this country the truth of the then existing differences in the State of Pennsylvania, the people of Washington would shiver during the coming winter. That bill is now on the Calendar of this House and its provisions are as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15157) to authorize the appointment of boards of investigation and arbitration, and to define their powers and duties.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the President of the United States shall be informed, by petition or otherwise, that there exists in any State or States of the United States a dispute between any employer and employees engaged in any business affecting commerce between the States, it shall be lawful for him, if he shall deem such action necessary and expedient, to appoint a board of investigation and arbitration to investigate the matters in difference between such employer and employees, and to make report thereon. The report of such board shall be made to the President, and shall be accompanied by the evidence taken during such investigation, and shall (together with all other things which the board, or any member thereof, may decide to report) include full statements upon the following points, namely:

First. A comprehensive account of the matters in dispute between the parties concerned.

Second. An account, in detail, of the wages offered to such employees, and of the cost of living in the locality in which they reside.

Third. If the employer is a corporation, a statement of its funded and floating debt, stock (authorized, and issued and outstanding), assets, surplus, profits during the five years immediately preceding such investigation, dividends earned or paid, a true valuation of the tangible property of the corporation (which shall, when practicable, be based upon the cost of reproduction), and the value of all franchises owned or controlled by such corporation.

Fourth. The opinion of each member of the board upon the justice of the demands and claims made by each party to the dispute, and the recommendation of each member of the proper course to be pursued by each party.

The existence of each board shall terminate with the filing of its final report upon the matter referred to it.

SEC. 2. That each board of investigation and arbitration shall be composed of seven members. If an employer concerned in such dispute shall designate a person whom he desires appointed to such board, the President shall appoint the person so designated. If the employees shall (either by the action of a majority of them, taken at a meeting or meetings called for that purpose, or through the officers of any labor organization of which a majority of such employees are members) designate a person whom they desire appointed to such board, the President shall appoint the person so designated. Such designation shall be made only upon request made by the President. If either or both parties to any dispute shall not, when requested so to do, designate a person to be appointed to such board, the President shall fill the vacancy caused by such failure to designate. Each of the members of such board shall, before entering upon his duties, take and subscribe to an oath or affirmation that he will faithfully and impartially examine the matters in dispute and make report in accordance with the provisions of this act, which oaths or affirmations shall be annexed to the report of such board.

SEC. 3. That each board shall hold its first meeting at such time and place as shall be designated by the President, and shall determine the rules of its proceedings and appoint such officers and agents as may be necessary for the transaction of its business. It shall be lawful for any district court of the United States, upon application for that purpose made by the chairman or any member of such board, to issue process to compel the attendance of witnesses to give evidence and the production of books and papers before such board. Disobedience to such process shall be adjudged a contempt of the court issuing the same. The board shall summon as a witness any person whose testimony is desired by any member of the board, and each party to any dispute shall be entitled to be represented by counsel, who may examine witnesses and present printed arguments under such rules as may be made by the board. Witnesses shall be entitled to the same fees that are provided for witnesses attending a district court of the United States.

SEC. 4. That each board shall conclude the taking of testimony within twenty days after its first meeting and shall report to the President within five days after the testimony is closed: Provided, That the President may extend the time within which testimony may be taken upon application of said board.

SEC. 5. That if after the appointment of such board the parties to any dispute between employer and employees shall desire to end such dispute by arbitration it shall be lawful for them to submit all matters in difference to the arbitration of such board, which submission shall be made under such rules as may be adopted by the board. Upon the submission of any matter in dispute, as authorized by this section, the board shall consider the testimony offered by the parties and shall give judgment upon all matters submitted. Each side to any dispute thus submitted shall be represented by counsel, and a copy of the findings of the board shall be served upon the counsel of the respective parties within ten days after the closing of testimony. A report of all proceedings had under this section shall be made to the President.

SEC. 6. That oaths and affirmations shall be administered by the chairman or clerk of the board, and any person who shall testify falsely shall be deemed guilty of perjury. The term "employer," as used in this act, shall be held to include "employers," "association," "company," and "corporation" as fully as if each of said terms had been herein expressed in each place where the term "employer" is used.

The President suggested that certain gentlemen should make a certain investigation. That was right. It is undoubtedly proper that we should recognize the public aspect of that investigation—recognize the public relation of the duties to be performed on the suggestion of the President and compensate the gentlemen; but if we are going to do it on the ground that a great service may possibly be rendered, why not go a step further? What does your commission amount to? They have not the power to ask a single question of the officers of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad and demand an answer. They have not the right to examine a book of any coal company in Pennsylvania. They have not the right to demand of the leaders of the other side that they produce evidence.

What is their arbitration worth? They have no power to act officially. Arbitration is as nothing unless you can make it a rule of court or otherwise enforce it. A agrees with B to settle their private differences by arbitration. Unless you can give their agreement force from entry in judicial records that arbitration amounts to nothing. This arbitration is what? It has reached a position that the arbitrators want the disputants to get together and relieve the arbitrators. Why? Because they can not ask a question with any force back of the asking; because they can not examine a document unless it is submitted by the grace of one of the parties.

I suggest to the committee this proposition. We are to pay $50,000—and it matters very little whether it is $50,000 or $200,000, because right here in the city of Washington that strike has cost very nearly half a million of dollars to the people and to those who are engaged in businesses that demand the consumption of large quantities of coal. I suggest that if you are about to spend $50,000 to reward these gentlemen for their patriotic services in accepting the invitation of the President to make a scrutiny of the affairs of Pennsylvania you go a step further and give them power to find the facts and then direct them to report those facts to the President of the United States. Then we will know the truth about the matter.

Let it be a board of investigation. To call it a board of arbitration is nonsense. To call it a board of arbitration is nonsense; to call it a court of arbitration is to make the word court ridiculous, because it is a court that can not enforce its judgment, that can not even find out the truth. It seems to me it is pressing upon us to make the appropriation, and I think it ought to be liberally made; but it is also pressing on us to go a step further than the President of the United States went, and provide a commission that shall have the power to investigate and then have the duty to make a report under which the people of this country can understand the truth of the conditions in Pennsylvania. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this bill on Monday. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and properly so. It carries an appropriation for the purpose specified in the bill. I think the bill ought to pass as it is, without amendment. Gentlemen have talked as to how this body of eminent gentlemen got together. We all understand how it happened. The country understands it. It did not get together at once; it was not appointed at once. There was no law authorizing it; that is true. The President, or the man who holds the executive office, in the emergency tendered his good offices to bring these people together so that work could begin. Gentlemen will recollect that at first they did not wish the suggestion of the President, and then all over the country there arose a tidal wave of sentiment. It came rolling in; it increased in size, and then they did agree.

Gentlemen say that there is no constitutional power in the possession of the President; that it is without law and without authority, and therefore without approval. Well, after all, I sometimes think that when there arises a just and righteous public sentiment over a great country, a sentiment which pervades 80,000,000 people, that perhaps for that express purpose it is larger than the Constitution or the statute might be under other conditions. We were all glad of it. These men accepted service. One of them is a judge—Judge Gray. The others are John M. Wilson, a retired Army officer; Bishop John L. Spaulding, E. W. Parker, D. E. Clark, Thomas Watkins, and Carroll D. Wright. Some of them are in civil life and some of them hold official positions. Then there are two deputy assistant recorders, Mr. Moseley and Mr. Neal.

Now, they are performing their duties to-day not by virtue of a statutory provision, but they are performing them by agreement between the parties interested, the coal operators on the one part and the miners on the other part, and in pursuance of a universal public sentiment which pervades the country. Now, one of the commission, Carroll D. Wright, writes a letter and transmits this bill, presumably by authority, and I will put his letter in the RECORD. They make a draft of this bill and transmit it. I take the bill exactly as they send it and introduce it and the committee reports it. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT] says that there was a bill pending at the last Congress to provide for arbitration or arbitrators in cases like this or similar to this, providing for compensation, giving power to send for witnesses, calling the courts in to issue process for witnesses so they could be compelled to come and testify.

That legislation is not now pending, or at least was not enacted, but this commission is performing its functions, called into existence by the request of the two contending forces, and up to this time the commission has not made complaint that it is not making headway. It may be that there is wisdom in the House, wisdom in the Senate, with the President, acting as a legislative body, to create and put in shape a law for legal arbitration. This proceeding, however, is voluntary; it follows our old-fashioned idea of arbitration. It may be that there is a power by legislation to provide that awards when made shall be enforced by the courts against the operators and against the miners, but no such legislation has been enacted.

I am not here to express an opinion about that. I am not here to say that such legislation, if we should enact it, would be desirable or undesirable. I am not here to say that it might not be apt, if the commission desired it, that power to issue process be given to the commission or power to call upon a court to issue process. But that has not been asked. It has not so far been indicated as necessary. Congress is in session. It will remain in session until the 4th of March next, and these gentlemen only ask us now, or suggest to us, that we make suitable compensation for their clerical force and such compensation as in the judgment of Congress should be given themselves for their services.

Nor can you very well tell just how much that compensation should be. We all hoped a few days ago that the labors of this commission would be dispensed with by a voluntary agreement between the contending parties, in which the rights of the public to the supply of this necessary article would incidentally be cared for; but, judging from the public prints, that seems, if it is to come about at all, to be some time in the future.

How long this commission is to continue to perform its duty in investigating and making the award which was provided for by agreement between these parties it is impossible to tell. It may be the 1st of January; it may be the 4th of March. In the meantime production goes on, and I have no doubt they will make all convenient speed. Sometimes great haste is not speed.

Now, if it becomes necessary to have legislation along the line that the gentleman suggests, then the committee of which he is a member, having jurisdiction thereof, can report a general bill, and it can be considered. And I make the same remark to the gentleman from Michigan. It seems to me that if we now meet the suggestions that are made to us, we go as far as it is necessary to go now, because many of us are lawyers, or used to be; many are great lawyers; but if in providing this money now asked we pause to settle by legislation all questions that might arise in the minds of partisans or of statesmen, it would be after the 4th of March before we would have arrived at a settlement.

In my judgment, at least, and in that of a majority of the committee reporting this bill, it is fitting to pass the bill as reported, which is substantially, in fact, in hæc verba, the bill that was forwarded to us by the recorder of this commission, a member of the commission.

I am quite willing to trust to the President. Some civilians from civil life might receive more pay from the Treasury than some officials who are on the commission. The President can take that matter into consideration.

Somebody says that there is no precedent for this action. Why, sir, we are full of precedents. I call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that the isthmian canal bill provides for a commission, leaving it to the discretion of the President to fix the salaries of the commissioners. So I could give many other instances. The bill providing for the deep-waterway commission provided for compensation for the officials to make a survey over and above their regular salaries. The same thing may be said with reference to the United States and Mexican boundary survey. So in the case of the Eleventh Census—the census of 1890—the work was transferred to the Department of Labor; and the gentleman at the head of that department drew his salary as an officer of that department and also drew half as much as the Commissioner of the Census had been drawing for several years by provision of law.

There is nothing extraordinary about this; there is nothing dangerous about it. I trust that all the committees of the House will not seek to exhaust their jurisdiction by amending this little bill, which is now needed. We will take care of the other matters when it is necessary to take care of them, and under the rules of the House in the ordinary way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that general debate may be closed.

The following is the letter referred to by Mr. CANNON:

ANTHRACITE COAL STRIKE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., November 24, 1902.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I hand you herewith a bill in the form of a joint resolution for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners. The propriety of such a joint resolution has been considered by the commission, and I am authorized to recommend it to the consideration of your committee and the House.

The necessary expenses attending a proper performance of the duty imposed upon us, while not large in view of the work to be done, are nevertheless of such moment as to be beyond the power of the members to defray, and the character of the work to be done is such as to justify its designation as a public service, to be properly provided for by the Congress. The amount appropriated should be such as fairly to cover the expenses and personal sacrifices of those employed in this duty. Of course, it does not necessarily follow that the amount named will be exhausted, but so much of it as may be needed for the purpose, under the direction of the President, will be economically applied in the manner stated.

I am, very respectfully,

CARROLL D. WRIGHT, Recorder.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate be now closed. Is there objection?

Mr. CORLISS. Just a moment. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me ten minutes. I wish to discuss this matter, and prefer not to do so under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CANNON. I ask, then, that general debate be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. HAY. I object.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] a question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Does the gentleman understand that under the provisions of this bill these commissioners will owe any duty to the United States Government?

Mr. CANNON. I understand that the commission as constituted, as has been explained, is proceeding to perform its functions at the request of the contending parties, and it owes a duty not only to the contending parties, but the highest kind of duty to all the people to patiently inquire by virtue of the agreement and when they have inquired to come to a conclusion.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I trust the gentleman from Illinois does not misapprehend the trend of my question. I understand they owe a duty to all humanity. Do they owe any official duty now, or will they owe any official duty after we have passed this bill, to the Government of the United States of America?

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman mean by which they could be mandamused or punished for contempt?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Or held liable for nonperformance or misperformance.

Mr. CANNON. There has been no refusal thus far. They have not asked for process, and we can not frame a bill that may wander about in the head of the gentleman from New Jersey and every other statesman who is interested in these questions in time enough for the purposes of this commission, in the meantime withholding the money to pay the ordinary expenses of the commission.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I understand, then, that the gentleman from Illinois admits that no member of this commission has any relation to the Government which is about to appropriate $50,000 to pay for it.

Mr. CANNON. It is not necessary for me to deny or admit. The gentleman understands the situation quite as well as I do. I approve of the commission; I approve of the agreement; I approve of the action of Theodore Roosevelt, who now is President; and as long as he continues to act as well as he did in this and in other matters, I hope he will be President a long time. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, let us be practical and pay these men. Somebody ought to pay them. It may be that we might take up a subscription from eminent citizens. I think that is not necessary. I believe the public sentiment of the people of the United States will justify this appropriation, and so believing, and believing it ought to be made, I reported the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in ten minutes. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS].

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to commend most heartily the action of the President in this great crisis. I appreciate as much as any other man the importance of it. There are four parties interested in this controversy—the miners, the operators, the railways and transportation companies hauling the product, and last, but not least, the public at large. The latter interest justified the President in assuming to act in the manner he did, and he has the unanimous approval of our people for his conduct. The commission, created without authority of law, composed of great and good men, should have some authority to act intelligently and effectively for the people.

My friend from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, says let us give them the money that they want. I say give them the money and as much more if they want it, but let them give in return, as they are evidently willing to do, some information upon which the public can rely, not only in this difficulty, but in any other that may arise in the future. We are appropriating money that belongs to the people. They will unanimously uphold the expenditure of the money, but every citizen is interested to know the facts. The truth and the right must be ascertained. The right or the wrong is not all on one side of the controversy. There are interests involved, and the controversy must be settled, and I hope wisely and effectively and in a judicial manner; but the public have a right to know the facts upon which the commission base their conclusions—what they recommend from the investigation of the facts; and I want to offer an amendment to the bill which certainly will do no harm and which will give the public information. I am confident that the President and the commission would prefer when they have completed their investigations and conclusions that the public know the facts. Publicity, in my judgment, is necessary. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment in my time. It is very short. It covers the whole subject, and I hope the committee in the interests of the people will accept it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to line 14, page 2, the following: "Said commission is hereby empowered to summon and examine witnesses and make a full investigation, in accordance with the recommendation of the President, and shall make a report of the facts and their findings thereon to Congress."

Mr. CORLISS. I am trying to clothe this commission with power to act effectively and wisely for the public welfare. Are you not willing to give them power to summon witnesses and examine them? Are you not willing to give them power to ascertain the facts and report on them? Are you going just to give them some money and then leave them powerless? Suppose the parties to the controversy get together and settle. Suppose the miners and operators conclude they do not want to fight any more. What could the commission do? They must come back to Congress if they are going to get any facts upon which to report. Why not look into the future a little? Why not cast our searchlight upon coming events and disclose the dangers that surround our people? These difficulties are liable to occur again. We are all human. Let us know what caused the strike and the differences between the parties. Let us have the facts. They will be valuable and enable us to avoid such dangers in the future. We want knowledge. We want a disclosure of the truth. We want no concealment by agreement. We want a revelation under the sunlight of noonday. In that way we shall get the truth. Then the people will uphold the expenditure of this money. They will rejoice in the act of the President. I desire to appeal to the committee to accept this amendment, and to give the people the benefit of the investigation and report on the facts.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. CANNON, Mr. CORLISS, and Mr. GAINES of Tennessee addressed the Chair.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. I was going to move that the committee rise; but if the gentleman desires to offer an amendment, that is his right.

Mr. CORLISS. I just want to go through the form of offering the amendment and having it voted upon. I will ask the Clerk to read my amendment again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to line 14, page 2, the following:
"Said commission are hereby empowered to summon and examine witnesses, to make a full investigation in accordance with the recommendation of the President, and shall make a report of the facts and their findings thereon to Congress."

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire to say anything?

Mr. CORLISS. Not at present. I reserve my time.

Mr. CANNON. I should be glad if the gentleman would not press that amendment. No doubt it would be followed by others and we should be engaged in legislation that we are not properly prepared for. The truth is this commission is proceeding under agreement between the parties, and I suppose the parties are in honor bound, if not legally bound, to abide by the award of the commission. I do not want to commence to legislate here in the dark without any suggestion that would give anybody a moral excuse to throw up his hands and say, "We will quit." We have gotten along wonderfully well. Everybody is at work and coal is being produced. If legislation should be necessary in the future, let us consider it after full examination by the proper committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Could not this commission, as the matter now stands, take their report and put it in the pockets of the parties to the controversy—the laborers on one side and the coal trusts and railroads on the other—and the public never get the benefit of it?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, my friend——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, can they not do that?

Mr. CANNON. My friend, who never, never, never, under any condition, fails to put his light outside of the half bushel, may have an idea that he monopolizes all that kind of thing, but there is no trouble about the public getting full information.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the distinguished gentleman, who has a "half bushel" of brains on his shoulders, give me an answer to my question.

Mr. CANNON. I mean that there is no trouble about this report.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Could not the gentlemen put it in their pockets and take it home and keep it away from the public?

Mr. CANNON. Ask me something easy, something that is probable. Ask me whether the world is coming to an end next month.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think it will, if the Republicans stay in power in Pennsylvania.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, how cheap that is for a man who comes from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I mean just what I say.

Mr. CANNON. I am not in the habit of reflecting upon any State. I suspect that things have happened in Pennsylvania, in her coal fields, that we all deplore; but while they have happened there, fourfold worse than any record in Pennsylvania is the record in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman does not state the fact. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not state the facts. His statement is gratuitous and unwarranted. The governor of Tennessee has not been criticised by Senator SPOONER or anyone for not enforcing the constitution of Tennessee. The governor of the State has not done anything in contravention of the constitution. He has vigorously upheld the laws of Tennessee in their strength and dignity.

Mr. CANNON. I rather hope and believe that the level-headed people of Tennessee, upon this matter, would ask to be relieved from the remarks of the gentleman touching labor outrages. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out on page 2, line 2, the words "As may be fixed by the President," and insert after the word "recorders" the following: "each member of said commission shall receive a compensation of $10 per day for the time he is actually employed and his traveling and other necessary expenses."

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I gave notice that I intended to offer that amendment, and the precedent for the amendment, and for the amount which is fixed in the amendment, has been taken from a law now on the statute books of the United States, a law which passed in 1898, I believe introduced by the present occupant of the chair, and almost if not quite unanimously adopted by the House, providing for the arbitration of differences between employers and employees who are engaged in interstate railroad business. This act to which I call attention was approved June 1, 1898. It is to be found in the United States Statutes at Large, volume 30, pages 424 to 429. It is a very wholesome statute, one that I think this Congress ought to recognize with reference to the disputes between employers and employees in all matters when the business is one affecting interstate commerce. I think if this statute had been so made heretofore as to express that this ought to be done with reference to the coal operations of the country, that the coal strike would have been ended and the Presinent would not have been called upon to do that most commendable thing which he did, as an American citizen, exercising the power of the Government and his great position to bring these parties to a position where the strike could be settled.

Now, Congress in providing for the compensation of such arbitrators as might be used, in the statute provided that the arbitrators, only three in number, are to be compensated, to be paid the sum fixed in this amendment. I am not particularly wedded to the sum of $10 and all expenses, although that is a reasonable compensation. It is more compensation than any member of Congress receives—$10 a day and all expenses, both hotel bills and traveling expenses. I do not think it is an effort to get cheap men, as suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, or that the President ought to be expected to go and hunt cheap men, as suggested, but there are good and patriotic men who are to be obtained for that compensation. Why, the chairman of this commission, Justice Gray, of Delaware, when he leaves his circuit to go off and hold court in any other circuit, or on the court of appeals, receives $10 a day extra compensation. This is fixed by Congress. I say I am not wedded to the particular amount, although it is sufficient, amply sufficient; but what I do think and do insist is that Congress itself should fix this compensation in the bill and not leave it unsettled and undisposed of.

Mr. CANNON. A word, and then I am ready for a vote.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have an amendment that I offered this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment now pending, offered by the gentleman from Georgia, and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. This, at best, is but a temporary commission. It is not like the Canal Commission, that is to run through years, where the President fixes the salary. The gentleman's provision would be entirely inequitable. There is Bishop Spalding, on the one hand, and others of these commissioners that are drawing no salaries from the Government. Here is Justice Gray, who is drawing a salary; here is Carroll D. Wright, drawing a much smaller salary, and so on. Without very considerable examination and careful provision the matter can not be fixed by the House equitably. I trust for this temporary commission, under all the conditions, that we can find it in our minds to trust the President to do equitably about this matter. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and which has already been read for the information of the committee.

The Clerk again read the amendment offered by Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane. The bill provides money for the payment of a commission which has been described here several times. Efforts have been made to amend it. The committee has rejected various amendments that have been proposed, and wisely so, in my judgment. This is entering on a revision of the tariff. What else may be roaming around in my friend's head I do not know—whether it will go to bituminous coal or the whole tariff schedule, I can not say. [Laughter.] Evidently, Mr. Chairman, it is not germane, and as I want to provide for the payment of this commission I am compelled to make the point of order, and if the point of order is sustained it will still leave the matter in the amendment penned up in the brain of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that this whole bill is based upon a project being carried out by the President. He appointed these commissioners, and he is now, in effect, asking Congress to pay for this, his machinery by which he is undertaking to settle this anthracite coal-strike controversy, find its "causes," and look into the whole "controversy." Let us see if this commission is not empowered to report that the 67 cents duty on anthracite coal is not one of the "causes" of this "controversy."

Take the body of this bill and see if the amendment which I have offered is not germane, because the effect of it will be to aid this commission in arriving at one of the "causes" which that commission is directed by the President to ascertain:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of such expenses as have been, or may be, incurred by the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission in the performance of its duties, such commission having been appointed by the President—to "inquire into, consider, and pass upon the questions in controversy in connection with the strike in the anthracite region and the causes out of which the controversy arose."

My amendment is to put not "all coals," but anthracite coal only, on the free list in fact and law.

The President in unmistakable language recommends, in my judgment, that the tariff on anthracite coal shall be removed, because one of the "causes" and to cure this "crisis." He says:

In my judgment the tariff on anthracite coal should be removed and anthracite put actually, where it now is nominally, on the free list. This would have no effect at all save in crises; but in crises it might be of service to the people.

Now, to meet a "crisis," Mr. Chairman, to meet the "crisis" in the "anthracite" region, to meet the "crisis" in the "anthracite" mining business, to meet the "crisis" in the "anthracite" coal business in the State of Pennsylvania, and find out the cause or causes of the same, this commission is in existence to-day, and by the President's dicta as an individual, of course. This commission is called upon to inquire into the "causes" of this "crisis" in the "anthracite region."

It is contended by some of the ablest men of this country that one of the "causes" of this "crisis" is the tariff on "anthracite" coal, and the most remarkable surgical operation, Mr. Chairman, was performed when that tariff of 67 cents a ton was placed in the Dingley tariff bill.

I digress a moment to explain how this law operates. All anthracite coal within the United States has less than 92 per cent of fixed carbon in it. All anthracite coal outside of the United States has less than 92 per cent of fixed carbon in it. The law so operates that in order for coal to get in "free" it must have at least 92 per cent of fixed carbon in it, when there is no such coal, as I am informed. This law is to be found in two separate and distinct paragraphs in the tariff act of June 24, 1897—one, section 415, and the other section 523. They read as follows:

415. Coal, bituminous, and all coals containing less than 92 per cent of fixed carbon, and shale, 67 cents per ton of 28 bushels, 80 pounds to the bushel; coal slack or culm, such as will pass through a half-inch screen, 15 cents per ton of 28 bushels, 80 pounds to the bushel.

523. Coal, anthracite, not specially provided for in this act, and coal stores of American vessels, but none shall be unloaded.

Paragraph 523 is found in the "free list," and hence all anthracite is ostensibly "free," but having less than 92 per cent carbon is taxable by paragraph 415.

Now, the coal operators referred to in this bill are backed up by this tariff. They are sheltering themselves underneath it. It is one of the "causes" of this "controversy." Therefore the President, with his keen intellect and sharp pen, says, "Remove this tariff," and between the lines he says it is one of the "causes" of the present "crisis in the anthracite region," which this commission was created to consider, and for the payment of its expenses this bill is to be passed and approved by the President himself.

Is not this amendment and this bill on the same subject, and will not this amendment, if made law, help this commission along this hard road to travel? It is germane because it aims at the interstate coal-region crisis or trouble, and appertains to one of the causes of that trouble, behind which, as I say, the coal operators lurk and stand there, like great giants, fighting the labor unions on the other side.

This is a proposition, Mr. Chairman, to appropriate money to do exactly the thing that the repeal of this 67-cent tariff on a ton of anthracite coal would aim at and aid in doing. One is to find the "causes" of the trouble and the other is to remove one of the "causes."

You can not possibly separate the crisis that exists in the industry of the coal regions—the very thing that this bill is called upon to appropriate money to eliminate and to inquire into the cause of; not only the cause of the strike, but the "causes" of the "controversy in the anthracite coal region"—I say, Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to separate the tariff on anthracite coal from the very purpose for which this money is to be appropriated. This appropriation is for the purpose of creating a machine, as it may be called, to ascertain the causes of the existing trouble, and this anthracite coal tariff is one of the causes, as we contend.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not been able to investigate to find whether or not there is any Congressional decision in favor of the position I now take. The distinguished son of North Carolina and adopted son of Illinois [Mr. CANNON] makes a point of order against this propitious, beneficent, and, may I not say, patriotic proposition. It stands indorsed by the President, and Mr. Secretary Moody has declared that this tax "was smuggled into the tariff bill in a sneaking and cowardly way and ought to be at once repealed." Let me read his language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must inform the gentleman that that question has nothing to do with the question of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will confine myself entirely to the question. The object of the rule now invoked is purely technical—to protect the House from being imposed upon in the conduct of its business; to prevent "cowardly and sneaking" legislation. Now, nobody can be imposed upon in this matter. We all agree that this tax on anthracite coal should be repealed. The Republicans claim that it was inserted in the tariff bill without anyone understanding the effect of it, although it imposes great hardships upon the people of this country.

Now, when my distinguished friend from Illinois makes a point of order against my proposition, and therewith, in effect, defend-vice and repels virtue—shutting out the American people, who to-day, in this city and elsewhere, are shivering with cold, from receiving the relief which this proposition would give——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee will understand the distinction between the discussion of the point of order now pending and a speech upon the subject of the suffering in Washington.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that. Mr. Chairman, if this proposition is subject to a point of order, then I appeal to the members of this House, regardless of party, to break through this technical rule and give the shivering people of this city and country relief from this trouble which has been brought about by legislation knowingly or ignorantly adopted by Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill under consideration provides a simple appropriation of $50,000 to pay, under the direction of the President, the expenses of a certain commission heretofore appointed by him to "inquire into, consider, and pass upon the questions in controversy in connection with the strike in the anthracite coal region, and the causes out of which the controversy arose."

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] moves to amend the bill by adding a clause repealing the duty upon anthracite coal. The Chair takes it for granted that if there were here a proposition to investigate, through the Medical Department of the Army, the cause of a contagious disease it would hardly be claimed to be germane to appropriate, in connection with that provision, money to build ships and quarantine stations and light-houses and to regulate and control the coming into the country of persons afflicted with contagious diseases.

One is a question of inquiry as to the cause of a difficulty; the other is the matter of providing a remedy for a trouble which is understood to exist, and upon which it is expected that this commission will at some time report. The house is asked to assume that the commission will report that the tax on anthracite coal is one of the causes of the strike.

In the opinion of the Chair, it would be quite as germane to provide a great many other remedies for the causes that may be reported to exist as for the House to assume what the report of that commission will be, and thereupon to proceed by appropriation of money, or by repeal of some existing statutes, or by the enacting of some other statute to provide against the contingencies that may be reported in that measure. The proposition is distinct in every particular from the bill here pending.

The Chair will cite to the House two decisions which have been made upon questions, in the opinion of the Chair, analogous in principle to that under consideration. The first will be found by reference to page 1097 of the book on parliamentary procedure, by Mr. Hinds; the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LESTER], now a member of this House, made the following ruling as chairman of the Committee of the Whole:

The paragraph to which this amendment is offered proposes to appropriate money for the building of a mint in the city of Philadelphia. The amendment deals with the general question of the coinage of money. It occurs to the Chair that the amendment is obnoxious to paragraph 7, Rule XVI, because it is not germane to the subject under consideration.

And the amendment was ruled out on a point of order.

There was a proposition to build a mint, and the amendment proposed was to supply some business for the mint after it should be erected. Later on Speaker Crisp, in the Fifty-second Congress, made the following rule:

To a proposition for the coinage of the silver bullion in the Treasury an amendment providing, among other things, for the deposit of silver bullion in the Treasury in exchange for certificates was offered and held not to be germane.

The policy has been under all circumstances to distinguish and keep separate the provisions of a bill which by no means depend upon each other or which relate to the same subject-matter. In this case the Chair is of opinion that the proposition to repeal a clause in the existing tariff law is wholly an independent question, a question that may arise with equal propriety upon any economic question which may be presented in the House and any question of national policy relating to taxation or anything else. But the policy of the House having been to separate and keep distinct the several matters of legislation, the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the Chair pardon me a moment? I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his amendment may be introduced into the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRIFFITH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "commission," in line 1, page 2, the following words, to wit: "including Hon. John Mitchell, representative of the United Mine Workers' Union."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I—no, I will not make the point of order. I would ask the gentleman if he is going to include other attorneys also?

Mr. GRIFFITH. No. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in good faith. I am going to vote for this measure, with or without the amendment. I approve of the conduct of the President in bringing together the representatives of the two contending parties. I likewise approve his conduct in the appointment of this commission. I believe, though, that as much has been done toward bringing about the approaching of a final settlement of this matter by John Mitchell as any other one human being. This has been done not in his capacity as president, not in his capacity as attorney, but in his capacity as a representative of the great interests of the mine workers. It is a great interest. He has rendered incalculable service, not only to the mine workers, but to the public at large in the settlement of this question; and while I believe this legislation is proper, I believe that owing to the part he has contributed toward bringing about an amicable settlement and solution of the matter he should be recognized by the payment of a sum for his services, to be fixed by the President. It is not now as an attorney, nor even as president of the United Mine Workers' Association, but as a public representative. At all times he has acted in a spirit of arbitration, in a spirit of compromise, and his course has been wise, prudent, and conciliatory, and but for the suggestions which he has made we would be much farther from the solution of the question than we are to-day.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, John Mitchell is from my own State, and as a citizen of that State I am proud to claim him as a fellow-citizen—a man of good ability, a coal miner in the beginning. He has performed, in my judgment, a great service. He represents one of the great parties to this great contest, and he is big enough and broad enough and has common sense and patriotism enough not to appreciate that amendment. The law knows not the great, the small, the rich, or the poor. It would be quite as germane to offer to pay the salaries of the other parties to this contest, and when I ask the committee to vote this down I will assume to represent my fellow-citizen from Illinois, John Mitchell, and state that he does not and would not appreciate such cheap-john propositions from anybody. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. GRIFFITH. Mr. Chairman, just a word. It is not my habit to indulge in a cheap-john proposition. I notice, though, that the same gentlemen, many of them, who now applaud the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, received this amendment with derision and treated it lightly when the name of John Mitchell was mentioned, as though Mr. Mitchell was a paid attorney or something of that kind. While I am not the representative of Mr. John Mitchell, I want it to go upon record that his services in this matter ought to be appreciated. If a fair settlement of this controversy is reached it will be by the intelligent, manly, and wise influence exerted by Mr. Mitchell, and to no one, not even excepting the President of the United States, will more credit be due.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRIFFITH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all thereof from and after the word "compensation," in line 11, on page 1 of the printed bill, down to and including the word "twenty-eight," in line 8, page 2, thereof.

Mr. CANNON. Let us see what the amendment is.

The words proposed to be stricken out were read by the Clerk, as follows:

Of the seven members of said commission, its employees, and the two assistant recorders as may be fixed by the President, such compensation to be paid notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1763, 1764, and 1765 of the Revised Statutes, or section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, chapter 328.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire very briefly to say that no man accords more credit to this commission for the service that it is rendering to the country than I do, but I apprehend that the question of compensation will have but little to do with the net result of its services to the people of the United States. As a general principle to guide me in legislative work I will say that I do not believe in the duplication of salaries and compensation to public officials. It is contrary to what has been the general policy of the Congress of the United States from time immemorial.

While there may have been exceptions, those exceptions, as the old adage goes, but prove the existence of the general rule. I believe it is wrong in principle to pay a man two salaries. I believe in paying him liberally for performing any public service that he may render, but I believe that the compensation attached to the offices or positions held by the three members of this commission, who are now drawing salaries from the Federal Treasury, is sufficient to pay them for their services. I may add that if this amendment is adopted it is my purpose to offer another amendment fixing the compensation of the unofficial members of the commission and the recorders. I believe it to be wise legislation to incorporate this amendment in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be voted down, and I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH].

On motion of Mr. CANNON, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GROSVENOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15372) to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners, and had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment and with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL FRIDAY NEXT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 619) providing for the recognition of the military service of the officers and enlisted men of the First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery; disagreed to by the House of Representatives; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FORAKER, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONFEREE ON THE ANARCHY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that Mr. George W. Ray, one of the conferees on the bill (S. 3653) known as the anarchy bill, having resigned, there is a vacancy upon the conference committee. The Chair appoints on that conference committee Mr. JENKINS, of Wisconsin.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Edward Henry, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 2 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.), the House, in accordance with the order previously made, adjourned until Friday, December 5, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1902—to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of Hawaii submitting an estimate of appropriation for Territorial expenses—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORIES.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I rise to an inquiry. Under the first call is a communication which it is desired shall be laid before the Senate in order. It is in the nature of a memorial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I present a telegram, and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the telegram?

There being no objection, the memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Territories, as follows:

[Telegram.]

OKLAHOMA CITY, O. T., December 3, 1902.

Senator ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At the nonpartisan interterritorial single statehood convention held here to-day, participated in by delegates representing every section of Oklahoma and Indian Territories, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"We, the people of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, in convention assembled, confident that organic union is our manifest destiny, again proclaim to the Congress that we favor the creation of a single State out of the area now embraced within both these Territories, and we offer the following reasons in support of our position:

"First. Neither Territory alone has sufficient area for separate statehood—Oklahoma's area is 39,000 square miles; that of the Indian Territory, only 31,000 square miles. The average area of the States and Territories west of the Mississippi is more than 100,000 square miles, while that of Texas, our next-door neighbor, is 265,000. Our combined area will make a State less than 70 per cent of the size of the average Western State, while taken separately we will be the two Rhode Islands of the West.

"Second. The resources of the two Territories complement each other. Oklahoma is almost wholly agricultural, while the Indian Territory is richly endowed with mineral wealth, and the combination will make a State of unsurpassed variety and abundance of natural resources.

"Third. Single statehood insures larger taxable values and consequently lower taxation.

"Fourth. Single statehood eliminates a crooked, wandering, and fantastic boundary line, which now divides the two Territories.

"Fifth. Single statehood confirms and cements a social fellowship already established by interterritorial organizations of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Episcopal Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Catholic Church, the Federation of Women's Clubs, and the Masonic and other fraternities.

"Sixth. Single statehood confirms and cements a business fellowship already established by interterritorial organizations of the cotton-seed oil manufacturers, the lumber dealers, the ice manufacturers, the grain dealers, the flour manufacturers, and other business organizations.

"Seventh. Single statehood, finally, insures a State which will quickly take high rank in this Union, and which we can bequeath to our posterity with pride and satisfaction.

"We are opposed to the passage of either the omnibus or the Moon bill, because their enactment into law means either double statehood or single statehood long deferred, and accomplished, if at all, by the attachment process. We oppose the attachment process because it is not necessary for the Territories, being ready for immediate statehood; because it is unfair to the Indian Territory to deprive its people of all participation in the constitutional convention and the framing of the laws and from a voice in the location of our public institutions. We oppose the attachment process for the further reason that its effect will tend to create a sectional line of cleavage in the State which might not be obliterated for generations.

"We think we are entitled to immediate statehood:

"First. Because it is a right guaranteed us by the treaty with France at the time of the Louisiana purchase.

"Second. Because it is a right that Congress ought not to deny to a million free and intelligent citizens.

"Third. Because both Territories are ready for statehood.

"Fourth. Because Congress has the legal right to grant statehood not only to Oklahoma but also to the Indian Territory (Thomas v. Gay, 169 U. S., 264).

"Fifth. Because both Territories have the necessary population, each having about 500,000, 90 per cent of whom are American citizens.

"Sixth. Because both Territories have the soil, resources, and climate to sustain this population and insure large and steady increase.

"Seventh. Because both have sufficient taxable property to support a State government without excessive taxation.

"Eighth. Because the work of the Dawes Commission has been so nearly completed as to no longer interfere with immediate statehood; that commission has concluded treaties with all the Indian tribes, providing for the allotment in severalty of their lands, and authorizing the sale of all except the homestead. These allotments will probably be completed by the time a State government can be organized. The lands of the Creek and Seminole nations have all been allotted.

"In the Cherokee, Choctaw, and Chickasaw nations the lands have all been surveyed and classified, and the work of allotment is now simply clerical and should be completed within twelve months. After allotment these lands are subject to taxation excepting the homesteads, which aggregate less than 25 per cent of the total. The mineral and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations are to be sold by the Secretary of the Interior, and as soon as sold will of course be taxable. It therefore is beyond controversy that the work of the Dawes Commission no longer interferes with statehood, and that there is an abundance of taxable property.

"Ninth. Congress can reserve such power over Indian affairs as it desires, and statehood will in no way interfere with the free action of the Interior Department in carrying out all the treaties between the Government and the several tribes. In this opinion we are supported by a recent holding of Judge Hosea Townsend, of the southern district of the Indian Territory.

"We favor the creation of a school fund for the Indian Territory. Congress is bound by precedent and principle to do this. It can be done by purchasing a portion of the coal lands which are already ordered sold by the existing treaties, or, if Congress prefer, it can purchase the excess lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, made subject to sale by the recent treaties, and donate these to the States for school purposes. In this connection we call the attention of Congress to the fact that Congress has heretofore uniformly donated school lands to new States. In Oklahoma these school lands were bought from the Indians, and we now simply ask Congress to follow that precedent in creating the last State to be organized out of the Louisiana purchase.

"The foregoing resolutions express our firm conviction relative to the situation, but if Congress is doubtful about our being prepared for immediate statehood, then we ask that the boundaries of Oklahoma be extended around the Indian Territory and that another Delegate be provided for, who shall be selected from the area now embraced within that Territory.

"It is in accordance with the spirit of American institutions that the people that are to constitute a State should be consulted relative to its boundaries, and if Congress has any doubt about the desire of the people of these Territories for single statehood, then we request that Congress submit that issue to the people of both Territories at a special election called for that purpose alone.

"Finally, and emphatically, we assert that the statehood question is not one of politics, but that it is a business, social, and economic question, in which our people are most profoundly interested, even unto the remotest generation, and we do most solemnly protest against any settlement of this question based on political advantage, partisan greed, or local selfishness."

J. T. TAYLOR, Chairman.
R. E. STAFFORD, Secretary.

NEW ENGLAND FISHERIES.

Mr. LODGE. I present some papers and statistics in regard to the fisheries of New England and of Gloucester, Mass. I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that they be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I wish to give notice that immediately on the conclusion of the routine morning business I shall ask for a brief executive session. I suppose it will not occupy more than five minutes.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 2d instant, proposing to appropriate $5,000 to pay the heirs of Thomas T. Prentis, late United States consul at Martinique, reported it without amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 3d instant, proposing to increase the salary of the consul at Breslau, Germany, to $2,000, reported it without amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15345) to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment, and to submit a report thereon.

I wish to give notice that I shall ask consideration of the bill at an early day, I hope early next week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS AND DEBATES RELATING TO TRUSTS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 2d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 1,600 copies of the compilation recently prepared by direction of the Attorney-General, entitled "Bills and Debates in Congress Relating to Trusts," of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 100 copies for the use of the Department of Justice; and that the Attorney-General shall cause an index to be prepared to said volume, compensation therefor not to exceed $500.

DECISIONS RELATING TO TRUSTS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MCCOMAS, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be prepared forthwith under the direction of the Attorney-General a compilation of all the decisions of the Supreme Court and of the inferior Federal courts relating to trusts or to the act known as the Sherman antitrust law, of which compilation 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 7,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the Department of Justice.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 6441) to amend section 4921 of the Revised Statutes, relating to injunctions in certain patent causes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HOAR. I submit an amendment to the immigration bill, House bill 12199, which is the unfinished business. I should like to have the amendment read, so that it will go into the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The amendment was read, and referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

Insert the following:

"Whenever an alien shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country and shall have filed his preliminary declaration to become a citizen, and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him they shall be admitted without the payment of any tax or fee.

"If said wife or either of said children shall be found to be affected with any contagious disorder, and it seems that said disorder was contracted on board the ship in which they came, such wife or children shall be held, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, until it shall be determined whether the disorder will be easily curable or whether they can be permitted to land without danger to other persons; and they shall not be deported until such facts have been ascertained.

"If it shall be found that they are cured, or curable by a brief detention, and they can be detained without danger of infection, they shall be kept in custody, under such regulations, at the cost of the carrier or company who have brought them into the country: and they shall thereafter be deported or set at liberty, as the facts may require."

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration, and ordered to be printed.

THE HAGUE CONVENTION.

Mr. STEWART. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to send to the Senate the report and accompanying papers of the agent of the United States in the case of The United States v. Mexico, before the Permanent Court of Arbitration under The Hague convention.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose there is not the slightest objection to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nevada, but it is my impression—the Senator will know better than I do—that it is the custom of the Senate in all cases of this kind, when making a direction relating to our intercourse with a foreign government, to leave the matter to the discretion of the Secretary of State or the President without an absolute order. However, the Senator from Nevada will know better than I do about it.

Mr. STEWART. I did not suppose in drawing the resolution that it was a matter to be left to the discretion of the State Department. The report is in the Department and is one of public interest, as it was the first case presented to the Permanent Court of Arbitration under The Hague convention of 1899. But I have no objection to a modification of the resolution as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I think the better practice is that the President shall communicate the information, if not, in his judgment, incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. STEWART. All right; let the resolution be modified in that respect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the practice in the Senate, and the resolution will be modified accordingly. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate the report and accompanying papers of the agent of the United States in the case of The United States v. Mexico before the Permanent Court of Arbitration under The Hague convention.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 15372) to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will allow the Chair, under the unanimous-consent agreement, to lay the immigration bill before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 8, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 5, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of Wednesday's proceedings was read and approved.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARNEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 15593) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order upon the bill.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice at this time that I shall ask recognition for the consideration of this bill at the next session of the House, if no special order be made.

CLAIMS.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, in accordance with the special rule in that behalf.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Claims, moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills reported from that committee under the rules.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. HEMENWAY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10469) for the relief of Mrs. Eleonora G. Goldsborough, widow of the late Surg. Charles B. Goldsborough.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SCHIRM]. I do not see him now, and I ask that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CAPT. B. H. M'CALLA AND OTHERS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Have I the right to call up bill H. R. 11576, on page 24 of the Calendar? I understand, under the rule, that this being Friday, the day set apart for the consideration of private bills, I am entitled to move that that bill be taken up for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11576) granting permission to Capt. B. H. McCalla and others to accept presents and decorations tendered to them by the Emperor of Germany and others.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the bill be put upon its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request to take this bill out of its order? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Capt. B. H. McCalla, United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the decoration, including a diploma and insignia, of the Order of the Second Class of the Red Eagle, with swords, tendered him by the Emperor of Germany through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 2. That Dr. Eugene Wasdin and Dr. H. D. Geddings, both of the United States Marine-Hospital Service, be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept, respectively, the decoration of the Cross of Officer of Saints Maurizio e Lazzaro and the decoration of the Cross of Chevalier of Saints Maurizio e Lazzaro, tendered to them by the Government of Italy through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 3. That Gen. John M. Schofield, retired, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the decoration of the Cross of Commander of the National Order of the Legion of Honor, tendered him by the French Republic through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 4. That Lieut. W. P. Scott, United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a medal of merit tendered him by the Sultan of Turkey through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 5. That Capt. Stephen L'H. Slocum, United States Army, late United States military attaché in South Africa, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a South African war medal tendered him by the King of England through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 6. That Commander James M. Miller, United States Navy; Surg. Oliver D. Norton, United States Navy, and Edwin V. Morgan, formerly secretary of the Samoan Commission and now secretary of the legation of the United States at Seoul, Korea, be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept, respectively, a gold watch and chain, a marine glass, and a silver writing table, tendered to them by the Emperor of Germany through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 7. That Capt. N. M. Brooks, Superintendent of Foreign Mails of the Post-Office Department, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the decoration of the Order of the Red Eagle of the Third Class, tendered to him by the Emperor of Germany through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 8. That George W. Hill, chief of the Division of Publications of the Department of Agriculture, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the decoration of Officer of the "Merite Agricole," tendered to him by the French Republic through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 9. That Capt. C. DeW. Willcox, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the diploma and decoration of Officier d'Académie, tendered to him by the French Republic through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 10. That Hubbard T. Smith, secretary of the commissioner of the United States to China, and consular clerk of the United States, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the decoration of the first class of the third grade, tendered to him by the Government of China through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 11. Lieut. Commander Asher C. Baker, United States Navy, and Frank W. Clark, curator, United States National Museum, be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept the decoration of the Cross of the Knight of the Legion of Honor; and that Henry E. Alford, chief of the Dairy Division, Department of Agriculture; G. B. Brackett, pomologist, Department of Agriculture; William A. Taylor, assistant pomologist, Department of Agriculture; H. W. Wiley, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture; M. A. Carleton, cerealist, Department of Agriculture, and John I. Shulte, assistant agriculturist, Department of Agriculture, be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept the decoration of the Ordre du Merite Agricole, tendered to them by the French Republic through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 12. That John A. Okerson, a member of the Mississippi River Commission; Casper S. Crowninshield, commercial agent of the United States at Castellamare de Stabia, Italy, and Miss Anna Tolman Smith, translator of the Bureau of Education, be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept the decoration of the Officier de l'Instruction Publique, tendered to them by the French Republic through the Department of State of the United States.

SEC. 13. That Lieut. Col. F. H. Phipps, commandant at the United States armory, in Springfield, Mass., be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the medal of merit, tendered to him by the Sultan of Turkey through the United States legation at Constantinople.

SEC. 14. That the Department of State is hereby authorized to deliver to the various persons named the presents and decorations herein specified.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of making a point of order that this bill has not been reported by the proper committee. I do not understand how the Committee on Foreign Affairs gets jurisdiction of this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. This bill is regularly on the Calendar, in its order now. It is a private bill.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. But I do not understand how it has got there. The bill seems to have been reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I do not understand how the Committee on Foreign Affairs gets jurisdiction of this kind of bill.

Mr. PERKINS. They are always sent to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. That is the uniform practice.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I make the point of order that, whatever may have been the practice, this bill at least ought to have been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS. No; the gentleman from Kentucky is mistaken. This refers to decorations of various orders. There are some for the Army, some for the Navy, and some for the various branches of the Government, and as they are bestowed by foreign Governments it has been the uniform practice to send them to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. We have reported one bill covering all these cases in order to save the time of the House, which would otherwise be required to pass some 15 or 20 separate bills. The bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw his point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. No; I do not. I believe bills of this character ought to go to another committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman anything to say on the point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. No; I only make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from New York anything to say?

Mr. PERKINS. I can only say, Mr. Chairman, that it has been the uniform procedure to send bills of this character to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky wish to say anything further?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. No, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say nothing further.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been the uniform practice of the House to refer all bills of this character to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and for that committee to report the bills. Therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether this is a provision of law made necessary by reason of the Constitution now forbidding officers in the United States service receiving badges or decorations or titles?

Mr. PERKINS. This bill is rendered requisite, Mr. Chairman, on account of the provision of the Constitution which provides that no employee or servant of the United States shall receive any mark of recognition from foreign governments without the consent of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire to ask the gentleman upon that proposition how usual has been the custom of Congress in the granting of permission in such cases as is presented to the House in this bill?

Mr. PERKINS. It has been the uniform custom to grant the permission when the Committee on Foreign Affairs was of the opinion, or when Congress was of the opinion, that the person who received the mark of recognition from the foreign government had deserved it.

I do not care to go through the list of names, but the first man mentioned will illustrate the principle upon which the committee has reported this bill. The first man named is Captain McCalla. Captain McCalla, as the gentleman knows, showed great bravery in the Chinese war, and for that reason the German Government, which had officers in the Chinese war, desired to show some mark of recognition of Mr. McCalla's bravery in connection with the German Army. It is proper, certainly, Mr. Chairman, that Congress should allow bravery to be recognized by any government. The other cases are all deemed to be meritorious cases.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman will recognize the fact that if this bill passes there will be great pressure for other similar cases. I desire to know how this class of legislation is growing and whether we can not eliminate a certain class of cases.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not think it is growing, and the committee has endeavored to eliminate cases without merit and report only cases which in their opinion possess merit.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Can the gentleman give the record of this Congress as compared with the number of such cases in former Congresses?

Mr. PERKINS. This is the only bill reported at this Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. This provides for a large number of persons; and is not the number growing?

Mr. PERKINS. No; there has been quite a large number of bills introduced, but this is the only one reported in this Congress. We have reported but this one bill, in which we have put all the cases which in our judgment possess merit.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It rests entirely in the judgment of the Committee on Foreign Affairs whether one has been brave and is entitled to the medal?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, in order to clear the Calendar, I move that the ten special reports covered by this bill be stricken from the Calendar. They are disposed of by the action of the committee just taken, reporting this bill to the House. There is no necessity of carrying the bills on the Calendar for the remainder of the session.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York indicate the Calendar numbers?

Mr. PERKINS. Nos. 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 135, and 136. I move that they be stricken from the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bills with the Calendar numbers of 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 135, and 136 be stricken from the Calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ascertain the order of business. There is so much confusion I could not hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The committee is proceeding to take up bills covering private claims on the Calendar in their order, and the gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I want to say something to clear up some doubt about the manner in which bills will be considered. As I understand it, under the special rule under which we went into Committee of the Whole, bills upon the Private Calendar, from whatever committee they come, will be taken up in their order according to their numerical order on the Calendar, with the exception of the bills reported from the Committees on War Claims and Pensions. All other private bills will be considered in their regular order. The bill which has just been considered was considered under the regular order and not by any special consent of the committee. It is my purpose, so far as I am personally concerned, to take up these bills as they appear on the Calendar in their regular order with the exception of one bill.

I propose to ask unanimous consent at this time that that bill may be taken up and considered. My reason for doing so is that I have received so many requests from both sides of the House to secure consideration of this bill; and a further reason is that it seems to have more than a personal or individual importance. It is the bill for the purpose of paying the architects of the Congressional Library an amount in addition to what they have heretofore received. The parties interested—the claimants—are Smithmeyer & Pelz; the number of the bill on the Calendar is 1473, and the number of the bill——

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman will pardon me for a moment. The number of the bill is S. 167. After the consideration of this bill, I propose that we go on in regular order.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. That is what I wanted to ask—whether it is proposed to proceed in regular order after this is disposed of.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 167.

Mr. MANN. I should like to know whether there are any special reasons for taking up this bill out of its regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not answer that question. He will submit the request for unanimous consent. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 167) for the relief of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] asks unanimous consent that the bill just read by title be taken up for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know whether there are any special reasons for the payment of this claim or the consideration of this bill ahead of everything else on the Calendar.

Mr. GRAFF. My reason for asking this consent of the House is that so large a number of members on both sides have expressed a desire that these men should receive long-deferred justice, as it seems to them. But the merits of the matter can, of course, be discussed, when we come to consider the bill. My reason for asking unanimous consent is the general interest manifested in the measure.

Mr. MANN. May I ask whether these architects have ever had a settlement with the Government?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir; they have.

Mr. MANN. Does this bill provide for a payment to them directly, or——

Mr. GRAFF. The committee proposes to have passed an amendment to the Senate bill. The Senate bill provides for a reference of the claim to the Court of Claims under instructions which would practically impose upon the Court of Claims the duty of going through the mathematical process of figuring the compensation according to the rates laid down by the Architects' Association. It seems to me that such a proceeding would allow to these people an undue amount—an amount in excess of what they are entitled to. Therefore, after consultation upon the subject, and after a very thorough hearing, we have recommended an amendment to the Senate bill, providing for a direct appropriation of $50,000 instead of a reference to the Court of Claims, which would allow $111,000.

Mr. MANN. I suppose this means that they will come in hereafter with another claim for the balance.

Mr. GRAFF. Not at all; they have expressed before the committee a willingness to accept this amount.

Mr. MANN. Did they not before, when they made the settlement, express a willingness to accept the amount then paid them?

Mr. GRAFF. No; they did not. They went into the Court of Claims, and they of course accepted the money for which the judgment was rendered. They were largely indebted by reason of the expenses which they had incurred in employing a large number of persons in connection with the preparation of the plans. They submitted to the committee having in charge the building of this great structure no less than ten different plans, and one of the claimants made a trip to Europe for the purpose of inspecting there the great public buildings of this character, preparatory to entering into this contract. They did enter into a competitive contest for the design, away back in 1873, with 27 competitors, and were awarded the prize for their design. After they were thus awarded the prize for that design they were told to make new plans. They went on and made ten different plans, that work extending over a period of thirteen years, covering practically the whole range of architecture, and finally the committee settled down upon the present plan under which the building was constructed—the Italian renaissance.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I should like to ask whether this claim or allowance is based upon any legal obligation of the Government? Is it the outgrowth of any contract, or is it an equitable claim?

Mr. GRAFF. It is an equitable claim. The fact is that after they entered into this competition for the design with 27 others and submitted their plan, which was accepted, and a prize of $1,500 awarded them for that sketch or design, which was selected by the committee that passed upon the various designs submitted and which they had been requested to prepare at one time by the Senate committee and again by the committee which had in charge the enterprise itself under legislation of Congress. But at no time was there any contract entered into between these architects and those who had in charge the receiving of plans for the erection of the structure.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, just one other question. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] whether, eliminating the features that are complained of in the Senate bill, he is not willing that this matter should go to the Court of Claims unhampered by any particular regulation?

Mr. GRAFF. If it went to the Court of Claims unhampered, of course they could recover nothing, because the matter is res adjudicata.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It would be passed on upon its merits if we give them an enabling act.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; but the fact is no contract was made.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The doctrine of res adjudicata would apply on their contract.

Mr. GRAFF. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a submission of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take up out of its order Senate bill 167, for the relief of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz. Is there objection?

Mr. WANGER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

SMITHMEYER & PELZ.

Mr. GRAFF. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that we take up the bill found upon the Calendar, being Calendar No. 1473, for the relief of Smithmeyer & Pelz.

The question was taken; and upon a division (demanded by Mr. WANGER) there were—ayes 87, noes 31.

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Court of Claims be, and hereby is, given jurisdiction to rehear and render judgment in the claim of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz for compensation for their services in preparing the plans for the building for the Library of Congress, and no prior settlement or adjudication thereunder of their claim for compensation for said services shall be a bar: Provided, however, That the measure of compensation shall be awarded upon a quantum meruit basis for all services rendered until such plans were accepted by the United States; and in the absence of express contract the rate of compensation subsequently paid to the claimants for services in the construction of the Library building shall not be evidence of the value of the services of claimants in preparing such plans: And provided further, That the measure of compensation shall not exceed the rates and rules established by the custom and usage of the profession of architects for such services; and the evidence heretofore taken and used by either party in the Court of Claims shall be competent in this suit and considered with such other evidence as either party may introduce.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz, the sum of $50,000, to reimburse them to that extent for expenses estimated to have been incurred by them in the preparation of the plans and drawings for the Library of Congress."

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, as I stated, in reply to the questions concerning this bill, it came to the committee from the Senate in the form in which it has been read by the Clerk in the House. By the provisions of that bill, should we pass it in the same form that the Senate has passed it, it would be equivalent to sending it back to the Court of Claims, with directions that the Court of Claims take the rules of the Architects' Association, which is 2½ per cent upon the cost of the building, and give that to these people for services rendered in the plans and specifications, deducting the sum of $48,000, which they have already received, which would give to Smithmeyer & Pelz the sum of $111,000.

Your committee concluded that the reasons why the court allowed them so small a sum was on account of their own neglect and their failure to follow ordinary business shrewdness in the management of their business relations with the Government. The facts are that these services were of an extraordinary character. They were rendered by two prominent architects, Messrs. Smithmeyer & Pelz. The beginning of the services was away back in 1873; and when they submitted their design for a Congressional Library building in competition with 27 others, the committee which passed upon these designs paid to Smithmeyer & Pelz $1,500, the prize offered for the design. The design itself, of course, was simply a sketch of the proposed building and not at all a full and complete set of plans and specifications. After the year 1873, as is well known by those Representatives who served back in those days, the Congressional Library enterprise was a matter which came up in various forms before Congress, until the year, 1886.

From 1873 to 1886, at the instance and request of Senatorial committees, committees of the House, and finally committees having charge by legislation of Congress of the enterprise itself,

Smithmeyer & Pelz, having been selected by winning the prize on the design in the first instance, were requested from time to time to make plans on the various styles of architecture known to art. Some ten different designs were made up in detail, involving during that period of thirteen years almost the entire time, and involving also the employment of clerks and men to do the mechanical work as they were directed from time to time by those various committees. We know that is true because when the matter was tried before the Court of Claims and witnesses were before that court and the question was examined into exhaustively, the court itself arrived at the conclusion that these two men put in solid time to the extent of some eight or nine years of that thirteen in making up their estimates for their final allowance.

But unfortunately for Smithmeyer & Pelz they were enthusiasts in their art, and there was not a scratch of a pen on paper to give them any assurance of what amount they were to receive for the work which they were rendering. Indeed, there could have been no contract drawn in the beginning of that thirteen years, because no one could have anticipated how much work or how many plans and specifications they were called upon to draw.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. All of these payments were made on the quantum meruit, were they not?

Mr. GRAFF. I will reach that point in just a few minutes. Now, according to the testimony before our committee, Senators Voorhees and Morrill, who, I think, were on this Library Committee, were in conversation with Smithmeyer & Pelz, and Smithmeyer & Pelz told Senators Voorhees and Morrill that they ought to have some contract for their work.

This was after they had put in a period of seven or eight years traveling abroad, producing these plans, having their entire force in the architect's office at the call of Congress from time to time. These two Senators said to them that if they put in a bill for 2½ per cent for the making of the plans and 2½ per cent for supervision, according to the rules of the Architects' Association, the legislation which was at that moment pending before the House and Senate for the initiation of the enterprise, which had been in a tentative condition for a period of years, might be defeated. They asked them to wait, and assured them that the Government would do the right thing by them. Mind you, there was no contract, no sum set, up to that time——

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Was there not a prize offered?

Mr. GRAFF. That was only a little insignificant prize of $1,500, which they received away back in 1873, but not a cent had they received up to 1886 for any of these services which had been rendered, and members who were present in 1886, when the bill finally passed for this great enterprise, for the actual laying of the stone and the erection of the structure, will remember that it did not pass the House by a unanimous vote. There was a very sharp division upon the subject.

Finally the plan, the last of the ten, the Italian Renaissance, drawn and prepared by these two architects, was finally chosen, and the building that stands across the way in these grounds is a reproduction of those plans.

In 1886 no move was made by them yet to determine what they were to receive for this long series of work. No doubt these men thought that if they were fortunate enough to be chosen as the designers and architects of the greatest architectural structure in the round, round world for the purposes for which it is used, the fame which would come to them by reason of having secured that work would make the compensation which they received for the work insignificant in comparison, and that they would have work crowding upon them on all hands as the result of their fame.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Do you think that is true?

Mr. GRAFF. That might be true. I am simply drawing an inference——

Mr. DINSMORE. Is it not true that they have lost a great deal of the celebrity to which they are entitled by reason of the action of the Government in not paying them up to this time?

Mr. GRAFF. I think that is true also.

Mr. CLARK. Will it interrupt the gentleman to ask him two or three questions now?

Mr. GRAFF. No.

Mr. CLARK. First I want to ask if this claim has not been passed upon once by the Court of Claims?

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, yes.

Mr. CLARK. And an award of $48,000 given?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. And they accepted that?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; they took it.

Mr. CLARK. Well, then, what kind of an excuse have they for coming in here again after the matter is res judicata?

Mr. GRAFF. I am just attempting to explain that, and I am now reaching the very point you are talking about, if you will permit me.

Mr. CLARK. One other question?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. You say these men would have got this money long ago if it had not been for their own negligence?

Mr. GRAFF. I am inclined to think that is true, yes.

Mr. CLARK. Do you know of any place on the face of the earth where a man can come in and plead his own negligence as an excuse to get a new trial except in the Congress of the United States in the case of a claim against the Government?

Mr. GRAFF. That may be true, but I think it is well known that men who have the genius to design great structures like the Library building, or to write poems, or to deliver magnificent speeches, like those delivered by my friend from Missouri, seldom have any business sense.

Mr. CLARK. I have sense enough to get some pay for my speeches outside of Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAFF. Well, I do not know whether you are to be congratulated the most, or your listeners.

But now we reach a point where these gentlemen yet had filed no bill, and no cent had been paid to them, and no agreement made for their recompense. They supposed that when the dream became a realization in marble there would be no difficulty about their being rewarded for their great work. Finally they went before the Court of Claims to recover an amount which was due them. When they commenced before the Court of Claims they had no scrap of paper upon which to found any contract——

Mr. HEPBURN. What was the amount of their claim?

Mr. GRAFF. The amount of their claim was some $150,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is it now?

Mr. GRAFF. It is the same amount, less what they received; but the Committee on Claims cut it down to $50,000, or some $60,000 less.

Now, then, when they went before the Court of Claims they attempted to show that according to the usage of architects there was a regular scale of rates under the Architects' Association, and by that scale 2½ per cent upon the value of the structure itself was the usual and customary price for making the plans and specifications, and that 2½ per cent was the usual and customary price for supervising and superintending the erection of the building afterwards in accordance with the plans. The court stated that after 1886, after the final plan was accepted, that they themselves had accepted employment under the Government at a salary of $5,000 a year for one and $3,000 a year for the other in connection with the work of supervising the actual erection of the building under the plans and specifications; and the Court of Claims stated that by the act of these gentlemen, in 1886, in accepting employment at $5,000 a year and $3,000 a year, respectively, for supervising the erection under the plans that they themselves had set a rate for making the plans and specifications.

Afterwards an appeal was taken, and it went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court, taking the same theory, that it was not on account of any conduct of theirs prior to 1886, it was not because the architects would not be allowed ordinarily under a quantum meruit to show the customary price, but because they had afterwards accepted employment at $5,000 a year and $3,000 a year, respectively, they were barred from recovering on other basis than the rate of their subsequent employment.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Upon that point. Was the judgment of the Court of Claims based on the theory of quantum meruit?

Mr. GRAFF. It was based on the argument which I have stated.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. As a test of the services rendered?

Mr. GRAFF. No; they stated that they themselves had fixed the rule by their conduct in accepting employment after this period of thirteen years for future employment in connection with this work at the same rate that they had contracted for after 1886.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is not the equity in the Senate bill based on the fact that they had received this?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not know that is on what the Senate bill is based.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Is this $8,000 a year contained in the $48,000 that they were paid?

Mr. GRAFF. It was paid to them for the work they did after 1886, as superintendents.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. But the amount is not contained in the $48,000 that they received—that they also received other sums. For what period did they receive this $8,000?

Mr. GRAFF. I think but two or three years.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Do you know how much they received?

Mr. GRAFF. About $13,000 under this annual contract. But, mind you, it was not pretended that that annual employment had anything to do with the services which they had rendered for a period of thirteen years prior to 1886 in getting up the plans and specifications.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he does not consider it a little dangerous to base our action upon a supposed promise made by two Senators to these architects so many years ago?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not base it upon that promise.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That was the equitable feature of it.

Mr. GRAFF. No, sir; the equitable feature is the amount of value which the country has received from their services, and the further fact, strange as it may seem, that in figuring in the decision the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court have taken no account of the fact that when employed annually they had no clerical expense, but while getting up the plans and specifications that they were keeping their own office and employing their own clerks, and yet the courts took that annual employment as the basis of the services that they had rendered in bringing not simply the work of hands, not the rough work, not in carrying out lines already designed, but in a creation of art.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that this claim was for services rendered prior to 1886.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, on what amount of cost of building is this a percentage?

Mr. GRAFF. It was figured upon a basis of $6,000,000.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman know that, under the plans they presented prior to 1886, it was estimated that the building was to cost $3,000,000, and that the plans were elaborated afterwards by the builders over the plans of the first architect until the building cost over $6,000,000, and part of that cost was the cost of buying the land, the approaches, and the street?

Mr. GRAFF. And I know also——

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman know that?

Mr. GRAFF. That may be true; but under the prevailing rules of the Architects' Association, as any man knows who has built a private residence, they are based, not upon the estimate of what the building will cost, but what the building subsequently costs to erect.

Mr. PAYNE. Exactly. Now, is it not a fact that the plans in detail were not prepared by these gentlemen prior to 1886, but merely rough plans—plans that were perfected afterwards by them or by others?

Mr. GRAFF. There was some detailed work that was afterwards rendered—after the period of 1886—but the structure itself, the conception of the great work, had all been accomplished and had been accepted, not simply from one plan that had been drawn, but from ten different plans.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman know that the great claim made for office expenses could not have been incurred from the mere general plans without presenting specifications and details—detailed plans for every part of the structure; that the great office work is in making details and detailed specifications?

Mr. GRAFF. If the gentleman from New York wants to leave the impression that the larger part of the work was done after 1886, that is not true.

Mr. PAYNE. The clerical work. Is it not a fact that one of these gentlemen was employed by the Light-House Board and drew a salary from the Government a greater portion of this time?

Mr. GRAFF. If that is true, I do not know it.

Mr. PAYNE. It has been so stated to me.

Mr. GRAFF. I never heard of it.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman contends that these men spent most of their time for thirteen years upon these plans. Now, is it not true that they were conducting an office in the city, and doing business for other people during this time?

Mr. GRAFF. That is true. We do not have to rely on inferences or speculation as to the part of the thirteen years that was devoted to these plans. The court took the evidence and reached the conclusion that they used eight years' solid time.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; but does not the gentleman know that the greater part of that time was spent in explaining these plans and this building to committees and members of Congress—of course, in a legitimate way, looking to the adoption of the plans?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not know whether that is true, but if it is true, I do not see how that should militate against the claim; I should think it would tend to support it.

Mr. PAYNE. It is the gentleman's idea that a man should be paid for his efforts in securing a good job. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, no; on the question of securing the job there can be no question about who was employed. These gentlemen were recognized all the time for a period of thirteen years as the sole and only people who were the architects of this scheme; after the year 1873, when they had the competition over the original design.

Mr. PAYNE. The original design was presented within the three months after advertisements?

Mr. GRAFF. In 1873.

Mr. PAYNE. Within three months after the advertisements?

Mr. GRAFF. I am not certain about that, but if that were true——

Mr. PAYNE. A prize was offered?

Mr. GRAFF. I think so.

Mr. PAYNE. And that closed that incident?

Mr. GRAFF. It closed the incident, but it seemed to be a determined factor on the part of Congress as to what architect they should select.

Mr. PAYNE. They selected their plans, we will say; that is the way I understand it. Now, for thirteen years after that they want pay for some indefinite service in presenting these plans to Congress. The details were worked out after 1886, when Congress adopted a general plan and went to work on the building.

Mr. GRAFF. Congress adopted a general plan, but it was a plan that had been prepared by these gentlemen, and one of them went over to Europe and traveled and made investigations and observations on this subject, and they put in as facts before the Court of Claims, and which I stated a little while ago, that by actual computation the major portion of the thirteen years was spent upon these plans. Besides that, they were compelled to wait Congress's beck and call during that period of thirteen years, and it resulted, as I am told by members of Congress here upon the floor, in the absolute financial ruin of these people, and it does seem to me that there is some sentiment—a little sentiment—in this matter.

Mr. PAYNE. I think it is most all sentiment.

Mr. GRAFF. I think not. It is not very much a matter of sentiment to the unfortunate designers of this building who are to-day bankrupt because they did not treat the Congress in the same hard-fisted and suspicious manner that they might treat some capitalist who was going to erect a set of buildings in which to inaugurate a manufactory.

Mr. PAYNE. They were allowed this salary in 1886, as I understand, and from that time on. The law was passed in 1886?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. When did they first make their claim for this indefinite service prior to 1886?

Mr. GRAFF. About three or four years after.

Mr. PAYNE. They did not make any claim at the time?

Mr. GRAFF. They had not been paid anything.

Mr. PAYNE. But they did not ask anything, did they, at that time?

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, there was no question about their being entitled to pay.

Mr. PAYNE. But they did not ask anything from the Government at that time or until three or four years afterwards?

Mr. GRAFF. They kept waiting and talking with the leading men upon this side of Congress who were making themselves prominent with regard to the progress of the building in its plans and afterwards in its construction.

Mr. PAYNE. Did the Government have another architect after 1886 who assisted in the construction of this building?

Mr. GRAFF. I understand that some three years after 1886 one of these gentlemen—either Mr. Smithmeyer or Mr. Pelz—refused to accept some cement which was tendered by some one for construction of the building over there; and the maker of the cement went before the War Department, which, I believe, had supervision of the matter, and made complaint that either Mr. Smithmeyer or Mr. Pelz—I think the former—had unjustly refused to accept the cement; that Mr. Smithmeyer had complained that the cement was not good and did not fulfill the requirements of the building, when, in fact, it did meet the requirements; and I know that a short time after that Mr. Smithmeyer's services were discontinued under his annual salary.

Mr. PAYNE. By whom? By Congress?

Mr. GRAFF. By the War Department, under his annual employment during the period of three years from 1886 to 1889.

Mr. PAYNE. And the man who had charge of the construction of this building was General Casey, was it not?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir. I think, as a matter of fact——

A MEMBER. That was afterwards.

Mr. GRAFF. I think that was afterwards.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no; from the very beginning.

Mr. GRAFF. No.

Mr. PAYNE. I so understand.

Mr. GRAFF. I think you will find that Congress tried first one plan and then another, and finally proposed to put the work under the direct supervision of an engineer of the Regular Army—General Casey, perhaps, whom you mentioned—who finally completed the structure.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, after the appointment of this new architect were not the plans materially changed and details partly worked out?

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, there were some changes in the plans; that is true. I have had some little experience in building, and I never knew a building to be completed when there were not some changes.

Mr. PAYNE. In this case the details and specifications were largely worked out.

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, there were some mechanical details worked out——

Mr. PAYNE. Mechanical details and details in art.

Mr. GRAFF. Not at all; the artistic portion, and, indeed, almost all the mechanical portion of the work, were complete in 1886, when they commenced the actual work of laying stone and mortar.

Mr. PAYNE. Is the gentleman able to inform the House just how much these gentlemen have been paid?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. How much?

Mr. GRAFF. They were paid $13,000 for their annual employment, about which there was no question.

Mr. PAYNE. You say they were employed for three years at $8,000 a year, which would be $24,000?

Mr. GRAFF. I think one of them did not work quite so long as the other. They were working independently after 1886.

Mr. PAYNE. Did they not receive over $70,000, including the $48,000 paid under the judgment of the Court of Claims?

Mr. GRAFF. No; they received $13,000; and then the firm received a lump sum of $48,000 for thirteen years' work. And out of that they had to pay for the maintenance of their office and clerical force during that time.

Mr. PAYNE. I read the report some time ago, and I obtained the idea that the amount they had paid out for clerical force was very indefinite; that the books or other papers were either never kept or were destroyed; that they had not any memoranda showing the amount that they had paid for clerical force or the amount that they had received.

Mr. GRAFF. The only difficulty about that was this: The firm was engaged in the whole field of architectural work—in making plans for manufacturing plants and for residential structures; they were serving private patrons, and at the same time they were reaching out and performing the scattered and irregular service which was demanded of them at the hands of the Government. One reason for this irregular service was the indecision of Congress concerning the commencement and actual initiation of the work, and it was well that this delay occurred, for I think that the time taken to determine what plans should be adopted and how the work should proceed was one of the main reasons why it has been such a splendid success in every particular.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand, it appeared before the Court of Claims that they could not fix this amount they had paid out; they made the best evidence they could on the subject. And is it not true that, while they had every latitude before the Court of Claims, the Government defense was more a formal defense than anything else, without the summoning of many witnesses or of producing much evidence?

Mr. GRAFF. It was a legal defense—it was a technical defense. It was not a question of evidence. It was a question of strict law—a question that these men had bound themselves by a subsequent action after the work had been rendered, had fixed a measure of payment by reason of the rates they had fixed for themselves in their annual employment.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course these gentlemen had to have drawings, after the 1886 drawing, of details and figures on estimates and all that sort of thing; and, as I understand it, this $8,000 a year paid all the office expenses for that kind of work, did it not? Is that correct?

Mr. GRAFF. Now I remember something by which I can answer the gentleman on that. That matter, I remember now clearly, was before the Court of Claims, and they deducted $3,000 for the insignificant service which was subsequently rendered by other parties for the making out of these mechanical details which the gentleman talks about, showing that the Court of Claims itself determined that the amount of service rendered in that subsequent preparation of those little details was absolutely insignificant in actual value as compared with the great work which was performed by these people. I am glad that the gentleman refreshed my recollection.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman's inspiration does not answer my question.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; it does.

Mr. PAYNE. That was as to whether the $8,000 a year covered the work that these gentlemen did in the office through their hired help, as well as their own service.

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, no.

Mr. PAYNE. Did the Government pay them additional to the $8,000 a year?

Mr. GRAFF. No.

Mr. PAYNE. For the work in their offices?

Mr. GRAFF. No, no; they had no expense.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, the gentleman does not pretend to tell this committee, does he, that in working out these plans, building this building from the foundation, these gentlemen were at no expense in their office for drawing working drawings of the plans and in making specifications?

Mr. GRAFF. The Government paid that.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman know that the expense of doing that sort of thing is much greater than making the original plans?

Mr. GRAFF. But the evidence shows that the Government paid that expense, providing the clerical help, so that they had no expense themselves. That furnished a marked contrast to the kind of employment they had before 1886. After 1886 they simply furnished their personal services and the Government itself provided the clerical work.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, may I ask my colleague a question? As I understand him, that decision of the Court of Claims was based upon the fact that these men set the price for their own work by accepting salaries.

Mr. GRAFF. While it was different kind of work, that is true; yes, as a matter of law, that is true, but there is a dissenting opinion in the Court of Claims on that subject.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is preliminary. And that the committee now favor paying the claim based partially at least upon the scale fixed by the National Architects' Association.

Mr. GRAFF. No; we did not base it upon the scale of the Architects' Association. If we had, we would have given them $111,000.

Mr. MANN. Well, you based it upon the fact that they should be paid more than the salary, and partially based it upon the scale of the National Architects' Association.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; we did so because we did not think it was a fair basis to pay these men at that rate.

Mr. MANN. What I want to get at is, whether this will constitute a precedent for any other case. We have a public building being constructed in the city of Chicago, which may be finished some time during the present century, if we have good luck. The architect is employed at a salary. It might happen that the building would be finished in time enough so that the yearly salary would not amount to as much as the 5 per cent that the National Architects' Association fixes upon; and I want to know whether he would be entitled to come into Congress and state this case as a precedent.

Mr. GRAFF. No; he would not, because that architect, and every other architect that has anything to do with public buildings under the rules and regulations of the War Department, has to enter into a written contract, and he knows when he enters the service just what he is going to get, and there can not be any misunderstanding about it.

Mr. MANN. This man, as I say, has not entered into a written contract; not at all. It is not the ordinary case of a Government architect at all. He is employed as these architects were, by act of Congress, and is paid a salary per year.

Mr. GRAFF. That is all right.

Mr. MANN. Now, can he come up later under this precedent and claim that he ought to be paid what the National Association of Architects determine upon?

Mr. GRAFF. Is not that a contract, if Congress passes an act appropriating so much money to a man to do the work, and he commences work under that appropriation? Is not that an acceptance of the contract?

Mr. MANN. No more than it is where a man works and receives his pay, and no more than it is when a judgment is rendered in favor of a man and he accepts the money and then comes in later and wants more.

Mr. GRAFF. No; these people rendered this service at the request of the Government and at the instance of the Government, without having any contract, for which the Government was just as much to blame as they were.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that I, like himself, am anxious to have the public building in Chicago finished.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I should dislike very much to see a precedent established here that would prolong it so that it would still be under construction after the end of the twentieth century. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. As I have been listening I have been trying to revive my recollection about this. As I understand my colleague, in 1871 or 1872 Congress offered something for the best plan.

Mr. GRAFF. The best design.

Mr. CANNON. For the best design.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; in 1873.

Mr. CANNON. Now, these parties competed and won the prize?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. From 1873 up to the time of the enactment into law of the provisions for the public library——

Mr. GRAFF. In 1886.

Mr. CANNON. In 1886. Is there anything upon the statute book that authorizes these parties to go on and perfect those plans from 1873 to 1886?

Mr. GRAFF. There was no law passed by both Houses of Congress authorizing the employment of these parties during that time, but the Government got the benefit of the services of these parties. They were rendered at the instance and request of the Government, and afterwards, in 1886, the passage of that legislation was a ratification of the services of these people in the acceptance of the final plan of the ten which they drew, which, by the way, was entirely different from the designs on which they won a prize in 1873.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, that is the very core of the whole thing, it seems to me. From 1873 to 1886 there was no line of legislation, I understand my friend to say, that recognized or authorized these parties to work for the Government.

Mr. GRAFF. I think there were committees appointed, perhaps, by separate Houses. Of course that is true.

Mr. CANNON. I suspect my friend will find that if there is any basis whatever for this claim from 1873 to 1886 it was upon the request of one or two Senators, à la the magnificent action of the Senate that took council of itself and begot upon itself this great Capitol extension scheme.

Mr. GRAFF. Is the gentleman through with asking me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I want to know if that is not the fact.

Mr. GRAFF. I want to say that that is very adroit.

Mr. CANNON. No; I want to get at the fact.

Mr. GRAFF. But the trouble about it is, that there was never any question in the Court of Claims about the legal status of these people and about their having a valid claim against the Government. There never was any question of that and never could be, on account of the subsequent ratification of the enterprise; and in 1886, when that legislation was finally passed and their plan was accepted, when they subsequently went into court, there was no question about their legal right to recover against the Government. The trouble was that there was no contractual relation so far as the actual amount that they were entitled to receive for their services was concerned. There was no question about the Government owing them something, and there was no question about the Government owing them for the services rendered during this period of thirteen years, because in the Court of Claims that very period is the only period which the court takes cognizance of in determining what services were rendered, first, and secondly, what they were entitled to under the law.

Mr. CANNON. My friend and myself both want to get at the facts. Is not this true—that they recovered $48,000 in the Court of Claims? Is it not additionally true that they had other pay from the Government, by salary or otherwise, making altogether $70,000? Is not this another additional truth—that after the commencement of the construction Congress stepped in and placed this whole work under the Chief of Engineers, and that all the working plans were made at the expense of the Government under the direction of the Chief of Engineers—that is, the whole construction was under his direction and approval, and that this amount of 2½ per cent would cover, if it had been given, all the working plans, all the architectural superintendence, every particle of which these parties did not furnish?

Mr. GRAFF. I stated that the question of the subsequent finishing up of the small details was a matter of evidence, was a matter which had been considered by the courts, and the Court of Claims determined that $3,000 ought to be deducted from the amount outside of this $8,000 a year which they afterwards received, should be deducted from that actual amount, so that these people actually paid for that subsequent service and work in making the detailed plans.

Mr. CANNON. Is it not a fact that the working plans and specifications have cost the Government under the administration of the Chief of Engineers over $30,000?

Mr. GRAFF. Oh!

Mr. CANNON. And not one particle of which was at the expense of these men; and that if they are to have the percentum, if the universal custom is not that they shall furnish the working plans at their expense?

Mr. GRAFF. If that was done, even if $30,000 was deducted from the amount, they would be entitled to more than our committee has recommended that they shall receive. For instance, accepting the statement as true of $30,000, at the 2½ per cent, we have deducted $61,000 from the 2½ per cent, and they would be entitled with the $48,000 they have received, if they are to receive the 2½ per cent, deducting the $30,000 which the gentleman from Illinois states was subsequently paid out for changed plans instead of mere details—they would be entitled to seventy odd thousand dollars instead of $50,000, which the Committee on Claims recommends.

Mr. WANGER. But that would only have been in the event that their supervision continued until the completion of the building.

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, no; the 2½ per cent under the Architects' Association is for making the plans and specifications, and not for the supervision.

Mr. LESSLER. Have you the provision of the Architects' Association?

Mr. GRAFF. I have it by memory. It is 2½ for making plans and specifications, and 2½ in addition for supervision.

Mr. LESSLER. Is there not a sliding scale on large amounts that does not come to 2½ per cent exactly?

Mr. GRAFF. That may be.

Mr. LESSLER. But it does not figure 2½ per cent.

Mr. GRAFF. But at all events, according to the evidence introduced before the Court of Claims, they would be entitled to something like $125,000 to $150,000.

Mr. LESSLER. Are not all the actual working plans in existence to-day?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. LESSLER. Would not you as a lawyer in a court of law, if you were prosecuting such a claim, get expert evidence to show how much time would be required to draw these plans, and would not that be the usual way of finding out how much work the men were paid for who drew the plans, instead of putting it at a half? I can tell you that in a great enterprise in New York to-day the architect says that it only takes one-third of the sum they get to draw the plans, instead of one-half, as you suggest. But I would like to know from the gentleman if he knows whether or not we could arrive at the amount that was paid in the way I have suggested?

Mr. GRAFF. There was something else doubtless done by them, and the Court of Claims reached the decision upon the statements that were made. Of course during these thirteen years they did some private work, but that private work continued to decrease until they lost their private business.

Mr. LESSLER. But here are the plans in existence.

Mr. GRAFF. Of course I did not try the case in the Court of Claims or I would have won it, and I know if I had had the assistance of the gentleman from New York I would.

Mr. LESSLER. I know that if I had been in the case and had your help we would have won.

Mr. RIXEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I was a member of the Committee on Claims during two Congresses when this claim was before that committee, and my recollection is that all that Smithmeyer & Pelz desired was that they might be permitted to go back to the Court of Claims for a new trial.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. RIXEY. And the question was to be one of quantum meruit. I remember the bill was amended so that they were to go back to the court for a new trial under the law and evidence. That bill was not satisfactory to them. I have no doubt the chairman of the committee united in that report at that time; and now I ask him if he does not think a bill of that character is a better one than a bill of this character giving them a lump sum, when there is no evidence before the House that they are entitled to a dollar.

Mr. GRAFF. I think the evidence is very clear, and I am not in favor of sending them back to the Court of Claims and then going to work to draw up a set of instructions to the Court of Claims to find in accordance with the Architects' Association. I have no quarrel with the decision of the Supreme Court and the Court of Claims about the law. I think they construed the law properly. I think it was exceedingly unfortunate that these people put themselves in that position by accepting an annual employment and thereby fixed the rate for the payment of work rendered for thirteen years prior to that time. But to send them back to the Court of Claims without certain instructions would be sending them back for a trial in accordance with the law, and it could only result in having the same decision that was rendered before.

Now, I think this claim arises above and higher than an ordinary claim. I think these people were very unwise, from a business standpoint, in having gone on for a period of thirteen years rendering services without having a strict understanding; but we must remember that there is such a thing as enthusiasm in art; that there is such a thing as ambition. There is a little of it here, I presume, that is not governed by financial considerations. These people were led on; each session of Congress was looked forward to by many people as the time when they were going to begin operations on the Congressional Library. It did not come. In the meantime these services were not valueless; they were very valuable, and finally entered into and made a part of the final decision which was made as to the plan upon which the building was finally erected.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman let me make a statement?

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly.

Mr. RIXEY. My recollection is distinct that parties representing Smithmeyer & Pelz before the committee contended that they had been taken by surprise on the trial and the ruling of the court was wrong, and it was for that reason, to give the court another opportunity to consider the law, that we were willing to give them a new trial before the court. I think there is a wide difference between giving them that and a lump sum.

Mr. GRAFF. I have no hesitation in differing with them about that. But it makes no difference to me what the House does with this matter. I am here to perform my duty. I think I violate no confidence when I say that the Committee on Claims at first recommended a lump sum of $75,000. I think I was the only member of the committee that did not coincide with that amount. I thought they ought to be paid something, something somewhere near in proportion to the magnificent thing they have given to the Government and to the world and to art, and finally we cut the sum down, reconsidered our action, and recommended $50,000. The committee took the trouble to send for these claimants and ask them if they would be satisfied with that amount. As a matter of fact I had a conversation to-day in the committee room, in the presence of others, with a Senator from the opposite side of the Chamber, in which he thought that we had been very niggardly in the matter. I stated that if the House passed this bill amending the Senate bill and cutting it down to $50,000, so far as I was personally concerned, I never would consent to its being raised over that amount. Now I would like to have the House or the committee pass upon the matter.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question. Is it not true that originally Congress proposed the construction of this Library and appropriated $4,000,000; that subsequently they agreed to appropriate $5,500,000, and finally the building cost $6,500,000? Is it not also true that we are indebted to the talent of Smithmeyer & Pelz, as architects, for the character of the building that we now have?

Mr. GRAFF. That is true.

Mr. HOOKER. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that their compensation as architects for devising the plan is one thing and their compensation as inspectors of the structure to see that the appropriate materials went into it when they were paid $8,000 a year is altogether another thing. They are entitled to pay for the talent which designed this most magnificent structure, the most magnificent on this side of the ocean and, gentlemen tell me, as magnificent as there is on the other side of the ocean.

They are entitled to compensation for that which enabled them to put in shape this building, more superb than any building there is in this or in the Old World. The $8,000 which they got—one being paid five thousand and the other three thousand—was simply an insignificant and unsatisfactory compensation to these two intelligent architects for supervising the structure of the building.

Mr. Chairman, I avail myself of the courtesy of the Committee of the Whole to extend my remarks in the RECORD to present the true history of the legislation of Congress in regard to the new Congressional Library.

The first movement toward a separate building for the Library of Congress was in the year 1872, whenthe annual report of the Librarian of Congress, Mr. A. R. Spofford, was submitted to Congress setting forth its necessity and outlining a general plan for such an edifice.

This led to an examination of the subject in Congress, and a commission was appointed by act of March 3, 1873, consisting of the chairman of the Committee on the Library, Senator T. O. Howe, of Wisconsin; the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings, Justin L. Morrill, of Vermont; and A. R. Spofford, the Librarian of Congress.

This commission was empowered to invite competitive plans for a suitable building, and the sum of $5,000 was appropriated to defray expenses.

Twenty-eight designs were submitted by as many architects, and out of this number the first prize of $1,500 for the best design was awarded by the commission to Messrs. Smithmeyer & Pelz, architects, of Washington City, D. C.

After many delays and differences between the Senate and the House as to site and costs, an act was passed, April 15, 1886, authorizing the construction of a building "substantially according to the plan submitted by John F. Smithmeyer," and $500,000 was appropriated to begin the construction of the building.

The next year, 1887, a limitation of cost to four millions was voted by Congress; but in 1888, upon a report by Gen. T. L. Casey, Chief of Engineers (under whom the construction was placed), that $4,000,000 limitation would provide only sufficient room for less than forty years' growth of the Library, Congress repealed the limitation and appropriated the sum of $5,500,000, which, with sums previously appropriated, made a total of $6,347,000 as the total actual cost of the building, exclusive of the cost of the ground, which was $585,000.

When the new Library building was approaching completion Mr. A. R. Spofford published a pamphlet giving a description of the building, to which I am largely indebted for the information I have on this subject, though I was in Congress at the time of these appropriations and voted for them all.

In this pamphlet Mr. Spofford states: "The entire massive building will be completed early in 1897." He further states: "This building is constructed after the architectural plans prepared by Smithmeyer & Pelz, with considerable modification." He further states: "The order of architecture is the Italian renaissance."

Even when the completion of the building was placed under the supervision and direction of General Casey, the Chief Engineer of the Army, and his able and accomplished assistant, Green, these gentlemen retained the services of Mr. Pelz as supervising architect.

These architects, Smithmeyer & Pelz, who conceived the design by their wonderful architectural talent, devoted twelve of the best years of their lives to this work, have given a work which, combining utility with beauty, has given us the finest library building in the world.

Driven by necessity, and unwilling to trust the child of their own brain to strangers' hands to fashion and put into marble, they did accept the meager stipend of $8,000 a year to superintend its construction, and were driven to resort to the courts of the country to obtain this.

The compensation for the brainwork which fashioned and conceived this marvelous dream of architectural beauty, of which every American citizen must be proud, must not be confounded with the work of construction and supervision merely.

These architects are entitled to every dollar they claim, and should be paid with generous and liberal hand and not niggardly and parsimoniously. To the original commission, composed of the late Senators Howe, of Wisconsin, and Morrill, of Vermont, and A. R. Spofford, the Librarian of many decades, who lives to witness the realization of his life dream, and to the late Senator Daniel W. Voorhees, of Indiana, who devoted many days and nights of arduous work to the new Library building, and to Smithmeyer & Pelz, the architects of this "dream of beauty," America is indebted for this combination of "utility and beauty," the grand climax of all architectural excellence.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I want to find out how I can get some time of my own.

Mr. GRAFF. I would like to close this up, but how much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CLARK. I want to find out when the gentleman is through and get some time of my own.

Mr. GRAFF. I will yield the gentleman half an hour.

Mr. CLARK. I only want ten minutes.

Mr. GRAFF. I will yield the gentleman fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has only seven minutes remaining.

Mr. GRAFF. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is recognized.

Mr. CLARK. For how long?

The CHAIRMAN. For an hour.

Mr. CLARK. I will take the hour; but I am not going to use it all myself.

Mr. Chairman, I find myself to-day in very distinguished company in fighting this claim. I find myself in company with my eminent friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. CANNON], the predestined Speaker of the House, and my eloquent friend from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH], and divers and sundry other gentlemen. At the begining of this Congress, in the long session, I announced that I had made up my mind, ungracious as the task might be, to try to save to the United States Government some money while I served in this House. I do not think that I am niggardly in my ideas of public expenditure. I do not believe that I have proved in this House that I am stingy about the expenditure of public money. But I will tell you what I do believe. It is a great deal easier to be generous with other people's money than with your own.

I am in favor of paying every man that does anything for the United States Government a liberal compensation, but I am not in favor of permitting every man who has transactions with the United States Government to loot the Treasury. I am in favor of paying every man that the Government owes every cent honestly due him once, but I object to paying any man twice or to paying him two or three times as much as he is entitled to. About twenty years ago I received a very short but important lesson as to public expenditures. I happened to be in the office of the governor of Missouri, Thomas T. Crittenden being then governor. Some man brought in a bill for repairs about the State capitol. Governor Crittenden looked over the account from top to bottom, and then, taking up his pen, he allowed just one-half of the amount claimed, saying, "Every man who has a claim against the State of Missouri wants twice as much money for doing a given amount of work as he would ask for doing similar work for a private citizen." I have thought about that remark ten thousand times here. I believe that a good business man could take charge of the United States Government and run it as well as it is run now for one-half the money which we appropriate here.

So much for the general view. Mr. Chairman, these people—Smithmeyer & Pelz—have no standing whatever in this House with this claim, either in law or equity.

Here is their case in a nut shell: From 1873 to 1886 they drew up various plans for the Library building without any contract as to compensation. After that they rendered certain services in superintending the construction, these latter services being paid for on contract. Their total claim was $150,000. All told they have received $84,345.

The Committee on Claims now asks this House to pay them $50,000 more, having reduced the amount voted in the Senate bill by $19,000, for which we are duly grateful.

In the name of the taxpayers of the land I solemnly protest against the payment of that $50,000 or any part thereof.

My friend the chairman of the committee [Mr. GRAFF] has had much to say about art and genius and grew ecstatic in speaking of them.

I do not pretend to be a judge of art; but, in my judgment, genius and brains have a marketable value, just like anything else. These people claim $150,000. That may be too much, or it may be too little. If I were going to guess, I would say that it is too much. But that has nothing whatever to do with the case at bar—whether they have received too much or too little. To have the value of their services between 1873 and 1886 fixed, they went into the Court of Claims; and, while I have never practiced in the Court of Claims, I have a general idea that the proceedings there are sometimes one-sided performances; that is, that the plaintiffs always have their cases fully prepared and introduce all their evidence and that the United States Government, for lack of evidence, is frequently left "in the soup"—to use a very common expression. However that may be, these gentlemen elected to go into the Court of Claims. They did go thither; and the Court of Claims, which is maintained at great expense for the hearing of cases of this kind, allowed them $48,000 for their services from 1873 to 1886. They appealed to the highest judicial tribunal on the face of the earth, the Supreme Court of the United States; and the Supreme Court affirmed that judgment of the Court of Claims for $48,000, and these people took the money.

They have that $48,000 in their pockets; they got the rest of the money for services under contract subsequent to 1886, amounting in all to $84,345. The matter is res judicata. There ought to be an end of litigation. They are estopped from coming to Congress for more. Whether they got too much or too little, if we pass this bill, then every man that goes into the Court of Claims and does not get as much as he thinks he is entitled to, after the question is passed on in the Supreme Court of the United States, will be here clamoring for us to give him another chance at the public crib.

I have observed—and I think every member of the House will bear me out in this statement—that this is the only place on earth where a man can come in and say, "I ought to be paid a certain sum of money, because I did not make as much as I thought I ought to make," and have any attention paid to him.

And there is another thing about this. My distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF], the chairman of this committee, says that on account of these men being men of genius they were negligent as to their claim, and for that reason insists that the House out of sympathy ought to vote them $50,000 of the public money. I know there is a poetic saying to the effect that genius is akin to madness; but there are plenty of lawyers in this delectable city who, while not men of genius, are hard-headed men of common sense, learned in their noble profession, and who could in ten minutes have informed these claimants what their rights were in the years from 1873 to 1886.

Since I have been practicing law, and I was admitted to the bar in 1875, it is the first time that I ever heard that a man can go into any court—and we seem to be sitting here as a sort of revisionary court of the Supreme Court of the United States; at least, that is our function here to-day—and ask for a new trial or a rehearing by reason of his own negligence. That would not go in a court of a justice of the peace anywhere. Now, this thing ought to be settled. I served on that Committee on Claims for two years and I always sympathize with the chairman and all the members of it.

If I had my choice, as far as pleasure of work is concerned, I would as soon be in State prison for two years as to serve on that committee two years again. It is the most unsatisfactory work a man ever did. You get no thanks from any human being. You get no credit out of the House or in the House, and if I had my way about it I would abolish it. I will tell you what I have been in favor of for a long time. I have not had leisure to formulate the plan, nor has anyone else, but I am in favor of establishing some kind of a tribunal where these private claims can be taken and heard. Why, think of it—367 men supposed to be fit to be in the Congress of the United States, drawing $5,000 a year each, sit here and sometimes spend an entire day adjudicating the rights to and the value of a mule!

Mr. CANNON. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I quite agree with him in what he says, but I wish to call his attention to the fact that in this exact case, before a tribunal that is provided for by law, there has been an adjudication, a recovery, and an acceptance of the amount of judgment, and under our Constitution, as there is no statute of repose or anything which prevents action by Congress, they come and appeal again to the discretion, or the conscience, or the judgment of Congress, notwithstanding that the tribunal has been provided for and has acted.

Mr. CLARK. My distinguished friend from Illinois has evidently been out eating his lunch, because I just went over that whole ground.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I have just been doing that and did not know that my friend had gone over the ground, or I should not have interrupted him.

Mr. CLARK. Yes, that was part of my speech.

Mr. CANNON. Then I think that my friend and myself agree, both of us having made it, that it is a good one. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. I am glad to be reenforced by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. This House is utterly unfit to pass on these claims. Any one of us, sitting as a judge, in all human probability would be fairly competent to pass on them, because we would hear the evidence and the arguments of counsel and would have the authorities presented; but we have ten thousand different things to look after here. When I was a member of that Committee on Claims there was so much business—and I suppose it is the same way yet—that they divided it up, and gave a case to each member. The member would go and figure on it, and then he would report to a subcommittee. The chances are ten to one that the subcommittee would take his report as all right. Then he is authorized to report it to the full committee, and the full committee takes it usually as a matter of course, and then he reports it to the House. While I was on that Committee on Claims I passed on more money value than nearly any circuit judge in any ordinary circuit of the United States would pass on in the same length of time.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. Regarding this particular claim—and I want to treat the gentleman as though he were not endeavoring merely to occupy time——

Mr. CLARK. I am not trying to do that. I am nearly through, anyway.

Mr. GRAFF. What I wanted to say was that we really examined this claim, spreading over a period of a number of meetings, very exhaustively in the committee, as well as in the subcommittee, and we had before us the exhaustive report of the Senate, the decision of the Supreme Court and of the Court of Claims, and several witnesses. This was before the entire committee, in addition to the examination which was given it by the subcommittee and by the particular member on the subcommittee who had the bill in charge.

Mr. CLARK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that the members of the House feel that Congress appropriates too much money year in and year out. The President, in his recent message, made one suggestion looking toward economy, and I thoroughly indorse what he said. That was as to the curtailment of the enormous amount of public printing which is done. Ask any member of the House in a general way and he will say that Congress is extravagant in its appropriations. That does not do a particle of good. You might make general speeches on the subject of economy until the world came to an end, and you would not save a single, solitary nickel.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentlemen from Missouri permit a question?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to direct his attention to this statement. I should like to read a few lines from the report of the Senate committee, and to get a reply to that statement of the Senate committee from the gentleman from Missouri, if possible.

Mr. CLARK. Very well.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This is what the committee states:

Under the decision of the courts the acceptance by the claimants of a salary for superintendence of the building constituted in law an implied waiver of their right to the usual and established percentage rate of the American Institute of Architects for plans and drawings. It is obvious that the claimants were totally unaware that they had by any act or omission of theirs made such a waiver. They unwittingly made themselves the victims of a legal technicality. * * *

Without their knowledge or intention, and without any motive for doing so, they entangled themselves in a mere technicality of law, which operated to deprive them of the greater portion of the compensation to which the courts say they would otherwise have been entitled. We do not believe any honorable man would consent to enjoy the benefit of such an accident, and we therefore belive that the Government should be unwilling to retain in its Treasury the money which only an accident entitles it to, and which in good faith and in fairness and equity belongs to the claimants.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, that extract from the Senate report simply states in elaborate form the fact that these men are pleading their own negligence. That is all there is to it, and as far as I am individually concerned, I do not believe that their negligence entitles them to another opportunity to raid the Treasury. They are great architects. They were prominent men in this city. The chances are a thousand to one that they had a lawyer in their employ; and if the rest of us can not take advantage of our own negligence, why should these men be allowed to do it? That is the question. I want to repeat it that I do not know whether they got too much or too little, but they must stand on the same plane that other people stand on. They have had their day in court and ought to be satisfied.

I will tell you what happens in this House time and time again. Architects and contractors underbid each other on the estimates submitted by the Departments for public work. One contractor will bid too low on a Government work, and he either does not make anything at all, or he loses money, or he does not make as much as he thinks he ought to make. Then he comes in here and asks the House to recoup him for the amount that he lost through his own ignorance, or his own greed, or his own negligence. It is not right.

As to what the Senate has to say about it is concerned, I hope I can say this and keep within the rules of order, that every man on the floor of this House knows that a large part of the money squandered by Congress is squandered because of appropriations that are forced upon this House by the Senate. That is absolutely true. Time and time again I have seen the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] make heroic fights in this House to prevent the Treasury of the United States from being saddled with appropriations that the Senate had fastened onto general appropriation bills. A few times I have seen him win out. Many times I have seen him lose out. Sometimes I have seen him achieve what we call in the Western country a "dog fall."

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. You never saw him back out.

Mr. CLARK. I never saw him back out. That much is true; and while I do not agree with the gentleman in politics, whenever he is advocating economy I follow his white plume as the white plume of Henry of Navarre was followed.

If we really want to economize, this is the accepted time, this is the day of salvation, and you will never find a better opportunity as long as you live to begin economy than by defeating this bill. I warn you now that if you pass this bill, then every time a man loses in the Court of Claims, or does not get as much there as he thinks he ought to have, he will be back here clamoring for us to overrule the Court of Claims and to override the Supreme Court of the United States and to give him some more money out of the public Treasury. To pass this bill would be to establish a vicious, a dangerous, an indefensible precedent, which in the lapse of years would cost the people countless millions.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the status of this claim, these claimants asked for two and a half per cent as the schedule price fixed by architects. That claim was presented to Congress and referred by Congress to the Court of Claims. The court made a finding upon the facts. The controversy was whether they should be allowed two and a half per cent or whether they should be confined to a salary. The per cent would be $159,000; the salary carried a much smaller sum.

The court says:

According to that schedule the claimants would be entitled to 2½ per cent up to the point where the suit brings their service, and to another 2½ per cent if that service should continue until the completion of the building.

Now, the court said:

Instead of the latter the defendants elected to give, and the claimants consented to take, two annual salaries, amounting to $8,000 a year, as an equivalent for the percentage they would be entitled to according to the schedule. The claimants—

I am still quoting from the decisions and findings of the court—

The claimants having thus "departed from the general rule of architects of measuring their compensation by the customary fees of their profession," as is insisted by the counsel for the Government, and having done this with no express agreement or reservation as to the preceding part of their service—

Mr. Chairman, with reference to the preceding part of their services, the court further says:

The court is of opinion that that part should be estimated according to the same rule which the parties themselves have adopted.

Not in the language of the report of the committee of the Senate, that they had let it go by mistake, but that which they have adopted. Following that the court rendered a judgment for $48,000. From that opinion of the Court of Claims these claimants appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and presented the question of whether they should have 2½ per cent, which would make $159,000, or whether they should have a salary of $8,000, making $48,000. The Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the decision of the Court of Claims, and rendered a judgment for $48,000. These claimants have gone to the Court of Claims; they have gone to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court rendering a judgment for $48,000, they went into court, receipted for the judgment, and then did what? After accepting the judgment of the court, no appeal further lying, they come to Congress. Come to Congress for what? For the difference between $48,000 and $159,000, while the claim for $111,000 had been adjudicated against them in the highest tribunal known to any civilized nation; and what is that claim?

Allow me to read just a little bit further from the report. The distinguished chairman of the committee says that this House should pay the expenses. What are they? They say they can not furnish an itemized statement. He says we should pay it because they did not understand at the time that they were making out the claim what their expenses were. If they were making expenses and paying out money for the purpose of educating themselves or otherwise that they intended to present against the Government, it looks to me they would have given an itemized statement, kept at the time; but the chairman says:

The claimants say they can not furnish an itemized statement of their expenses, but the committee in making an estimate of those expenses have kept far within the expert testimony above referred to. That testimony, that these expenses are usually about 50 per cent of the 2½ per cent of the cost of the building, is equivalent to estimating the claimants' expenses at $79,600, which is 50 per cent of their claim, or $159,200, based on the 2½ per cent rule.

That is asking members of this House to readjudicate the claim and overrule the Court of Claims, where the evidence was presented; overrule the Supreme Court of the United States, where it was reviewed in presence of counsel, and ask us to vote $69,000 to these men on expenses that they say they kept no account of and have no knowledge of the amount they expended, because perchance some architect under that rule has said probably the expenses would have been $69,000. The Supreme Court of the United States has followed the decision of the Court of Claims and said that they accepted willingly, without reservation, a salary of $8,000, and that they should be bound by it. Whether they spent $10,000, $50,000, or $69,000, are we, the representatives of the people, to vote to them $59,000 or $69,000 in the face of the decision of the court, when the court has decided the amount and they have accepted it and gone hence with it, and are not now able to say what their expenses were?

I want to say to you, following along the line of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], I believe in the Government paying every dollar that it owes, but when it has paid it once and the court has adjudicated it and the parties to the controversy have accepted the amount, when they come and ask us as a matter of gratuity, and it is nothing less, it is not a matter of exuberance, as said by the chairman of the committee, but simply asking us in some kind of generosity to vote out of the Treasury of the United States $69,000 on expenses, the amount of which was never kept, allowed to run fifteen years, presented to the Court of Claims and afterwards affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, what shall we say when we go to our constituency criticising each other for extravagance? We have already appropriated during this Fifty-seventh Congress more money than has been appropriated by any other Congress—almost a billion of dollars. If there is any place along this record where a yea-and-nay vote can be taken, and any gentleman wants to put on record his yea vote in favor of this bill, for one I propose to say that he shall have a chance to do it. I do not believe the Government owes these gentlemen a dollar. They performed a great service; they have been paid. The courts have adjudicated the amount, and for one I am willing to leave it where the courts have stopped with it. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. In the first place, I will move that the amendment recommended by the committee, which the Clerk has, be adopted. I will say that the amendment is the proposition of the House committee which cuts the amount down to $50,000.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAFF. I now move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and upon a division (demanded by Mr. GRAFF) there were—ayes 27, noes 59.

So the motion was lost.

JULIUS A. KAISER.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the House bill 6649, for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Julius A. Kaiser upon the retired list of the Navy, in the grade of passed assistant engineer, as of the date he was entitled by law or navy regulations to examination for promotion from assistant engineer to said grade.

Mr. GRAFF. This bill is not the next one in the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The next Calendar number is 479.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection that the Calendar No. 479 be passed without prejudice? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAFF. I will ask that the next one be passed without prejudice. I am informed that the gentleman who reported the bill from the committee requests that that should be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that Calendar No. 581 be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. That leaves the next Calendar No. 583, and the gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, the facts of the case are fully set forth in the report of the committee; and unless some member objects, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GRAFF. I think, Mr. Chairman, the Calendar is in error with reference to No. 611.

WILLIAM A. TREADWELL.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether Calendar No. 609 is now in order?

Mr. GRAFF. It is in order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs are not in order except on pension days.

Mr. PARKER. But this is not to remove a charge of desertion. It is to grant an honorable discharge to an officer which in this case can only be done by special bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill would be in order, then, to-day, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3787) to grant honorable discharge to William A. Treadwell.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to William A. Treadwell, late captain of Company G, Fourteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery Volunteers, an honorable discharge, to date from December 14, 1864.

The following amendment was recommended by the committee:

Add at the end thereof the words—

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, in this case Captain Treadwell applied for a discharge on a surgeon's certificate of disability. A report had been made against him, without his knowledge, accusing him of not going to the front in battle, and he was dismissed, without trial, for cowardice. He appealed to a military commission sitting in Washington. The case was thoroughly heard, with evidence. It was proved that he was with his company in front of the battle all the day and all the night, and a report was made in his favor, after hearing the evidence, by the military commission that he should be granted an honorable discharge.

That report was concurred in by Judge-Advocate-General Holt after an exhaustive review of the facts. The President then issued an order revoking the dismissal and granting him an honorable discharge. It is held by the War Department that that order was of no validity because he was already out of the service, and they acknowledged that it ought to have been done. This bill makes the order valid and grants him an honorable discharge, with the proviso against any pay becoming due by virtue of the act. I think it ought to pass.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GRAFF. Calendar No. 611, House bill No. 678, was reported by our committee, and it seems that the claimant went to the Senate and secured this item to be put into the omnibus bill which passed both Houses of Congress and was signed by the President. Under these circumstances, I move that that bill lie on the table.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if the bill (H. R. 678) introduced before our committee was not for the sum of $840?

Mr. GRAFF. It was.

Mr. CUSHMAN. The item inserted in the omnibus bill was for $504. Would there be any objection to our asking that the present bill be amended so as to provide for that difference?

Mr. GRAFF. There would be objection, for the reason that at the last session of Congress the claimant sought his two remedies at the same time; he got the benefit of the "omnibus bill" first and accepted the amount therein appropriated. I think he ought to be satisfied with his success in that matter. Therefore I insist upon my motion, that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF].

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN DONAHUE.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the next bill on the Calendar, House bill 10143, for the relief of John Donahue, the RECORD of the last session of Congress shows, as I understand, that this selfsame bill was considered and the enacting clause stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. That appears to be the fact.

Mr. GRAFF. Therefore I suppose there is nothing for us to do about the matter except to pass the bill over.

WILLIS BENEFIELD.

The next business in order was the bill (H. R. 2559) for the relief of Willis Benefield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Willis Benefield, of Sullivan, Ind., the sum of $1,300, with interest thereon from the 22d day of February, 1855, at 6 per cent per annum, for the improvements made by said Willis Benefield upon NW. ¼ sec. 21, T. 9 N., R. 9 W., in Sullivan County, Ind., under a patent issued June 10, 1849, to said Benefield in the name of Willis Benefoel, under land warrant 5202, act of 1847, held by him as a soldier in the Second Regiment of Indiana Volunteers for service in the Mexican war, which said location, patent, and record were canceled by the United States on the 2d day of March, 1855, said NW. ¼ sec. 21, township and range aforesaid, having been selected under the act giving certain lands for the construction of the Wabash and Erie Canal prior to said date.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Claims were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "of," in line 5, page 1, to word "said," in line 8, page 1, and insert "$1,400 for land and improvements made by;" and strike out the word "Benefoel," in line 12, and insert "Benefield."

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, the report in this case was presented by the gentleman from Virginia, now deceased, Mr. Otey. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS], to whom I now yield, that he may make an explanation.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this claimant was a Mexican soldier. In 1847 a land warrant was issued to him for 160 acres of land in Sullivan County, Ind. In 1849 he entered upon the land and began improvements, and he continued in possession until 1854, when it was ascertained that prior to the time when the warrant was issued to him a warrant had been issued to the Wabash and Erie Canal Company, so that the canal company had an older claim than his. The Government called upon him to surrender his warrant. In the meantime he had made improvements upon the land by clearing and fencing, and also by building a house. In response to the request of the Government he surrendered his warrant. In 1854 Mr. Davis, then a member of the House, presented to the House the claim of this man, and it was referred to the Court of Claims. The report contains in full the finding of the court, which is as follows:

Loring, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The petitioner, a soldier in the Mexican war, held a land warrant, No. 5202, for 160 acres, which, on the 31st December, 1847, he located on the northwest quarter of section 21, township 9 north, range 9 west, Vincennes district, Indiana, and he received a patent for the same June 10, 1849. He entered upon the possession of the land and made improvements thereon which are described in the evidence as consistent "of about 70 acres being inclosed and near 60 cultivated, with comfortable buildings thereon." In 1854 it was ascertained that the land thus located by the petitioner had been previously disposed of by the United States, and on the 12th July, 1854, the petitioner was informed of the fact. On the 7th January, 1855, he requested that his warrant might be returned to him, and, on his releasing to the United States the land located, the patent which had been issued to him was canceled, and the original warrant was redelivered to him. The evidence in the record shows that the land increased in value while the petitioner held it by the sum of $2,200. And the value of the improvements made by petitioner, apart from the value of the land, was $1,200. And the plaintiff claims of the United States $3,400.

But the plaintiff has no legal ground of claim. The patent or grant of the United States contains no warranty or covenant of title, and the contract can not be carried beyond its turn. By the settled rule of the common law those terms do not make or imply a warranty or covenant of title. (Kent Com., 4 vol., pages 471 and 474 and notes.) Admitting that the petitioner was led into error and loss by the mistake of the officers in the land office, the United States are not liable in damages for the mistakes of their officers.

If the United States were liable, as on a covenant of warranty of title, the rule of damages would be the value of the land when the warrant was made, or $1.25 per acre and no more. The petitioner has received that or its equivalent in the return of his warrant for a new location at $1.25 per acre. He can not hold this and have a claim for damages.

The return of the warrant was tantamount to the return of the purchase money for lands erroneously located; and this is the only measure of relief the statutes of the United States prescribe for lands purchased and for which the title fails. (4 Stat., 80, c. 5, Jan. 12, 1825.)

On the whole case we are of the opinion that the petitioner is not entitled to relief.

In other words, it appears by this finding of the court that, notwithstanding this claimant, relying upon an act of the officer of the United States, entered upon and improved the land, there is no legal liability of the Government to reimburse him for the loss which he suffered by reason of the act of the public officer. Thus we are left to the clear implication that the proper place for this man to come for remuneration was the Congress of the United States.

The Committee on Claims has stricken out that part of the bill which provided for the payment of interest. More than that, the committee has stricken out the provision for repayment of $2,200, the value of the improvements which this man made upon the land; and they recommend that he be allowed only $1,400 for the house and other buildings erected by him upon the ground from which he was subsequently evicted.

I confess, Mr. Chairman, I can scarcely conceive the distinction made between allowing this man the money expended by him on the house and the allowance of money for the ground. Yet I am not here for the purpose of complaining of the committee, for I know how hard it is for a claimant to get his just dues from "the best Government in the world," that of the United States. I am therefore willing to accept on behalf of this old soldier, now 77 years old—he was younger in 1847, when he went into the Mexican war, and received as part compensation for his services to the Government the land warrant which was subsequently taken from him by reason of a mistake of a Government officer—I am willing, under the circumstances, to accept in his behalf in the closing years of his life $1,400, notwithstanding he actually spent $3,400. If this were any other creditor than a creditor of the United States he would be entitled not only to the $3,400, but also to the interest thereon. Who will gainsay this small allowance?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much did the improvements enhance the value of the land?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Three thousand four hundred dollars. He improved it away back in 1849.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He put $3,400 on it?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. A $1,200 house on it and $2,200 in the way of clearing and improving the land. That was so found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much have his improvements appreciated the value of the land—not how much the improvements cost, but how much they improved the value of the land. That is the rule of law, as I understand.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. As I read before, the value of improvements made by petitioner apart from the value of the land was $1,200, and the plaintiff's claim therefore is $3,400, thereby appreciating the value by reason of the building alone $1,200. The house added to the value of the land $1,200, is what I tried to say.

Mr. GRAFF. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. The committee cut the amount down?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GRAFF. And the gentleman is willing to accept the amendment of the committee?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes. As I said, I thoroughly believe it ought to be $3,400, but realizing all these difficulties, I am content. I ought to say that it passed this House at the last session of the Fifty-sixth Congress for $3,400, but did not reach the Senate in time for action, and we have lost $2,200 by reason of that fact.

I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JULIA L. HALL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1727) for the relief of Mrs. Julia L. Hall.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I would ask if the gentleman intends to take that bill up again to-day?

Mr. GRAFF. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that this was done partly as——

Mr. COWHERD. It is not the intention of the gentleman to call it up again to-day?

Mr. GRAFF. It is not, unless the gentleman from Missouri receives notice from me.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be passed without prejudice. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill (S. 167) for the relief of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HEIRS OF AARON VAN CAMP AND VIRGINIUS P. CHAPIN.

The next business was the bill (S. 342) ror the relief of the heirs of Aaron Van Camp and Virginius P. Chapin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Aaron Van Camp and Virginius P. Chapin against the United States (Congressional case No. 1049), the findings of fact in which were transmitted to the House of Representatives by House Miscellaneous Document No. 81, Fifty-first Congress, second session, is hereby referred to the Court of Claims to hear and determine the question of the liability of the United States for the losses found by said court in its said sixth finding of fact, with jurisdiction to hear and determine the same upon the principles of law and equity and in compliance with the rules and regulations of said court.

And in the event the said court shall be of the opinion that the United States are justly liable, under all the circumstances of the said case, for the losses and damages sustained by the said decedents by reason of the acts of their officers in the premises, the said court shall render judgment in favor of the claimants for the amount found to be due by its sixth finding of fact in the said Congressional case No. 1049, as set forth in the report of said court to the Speaker of the House of Representatives on January 8, 1891: Provided, That no statute of limitations shall be pleaded in bar of the recovery of said claim: And provided further, That in determining the question of the liability of the United States the said court shall consider the testimony submitted to it in the investigation of said Congressional case No. 1049, together with all affidavits, documents, and reports of Congressional committees touching the question of liability of the United States and heretofore filed in any of the departments of the Government; also the reports of officers of the State and Treasury departments of the United States in the settlements of accounts of the officers of the United States in connection with the said claim.

And furthermore, that if the judgment shall be rendered against the United States for the amount found and fixed by said court in said sixth finding of fact, to wit, the sum of $80,100, the same shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representatives of the said Aaron Van Camp, deceased, and the said Virginius P. Chapin, deceased, as their respective interests may appear, and the new action to be brought under the provisions of this act shall be in the name of said legal representatives.

Strike out all after the word "claim," on page 2, in line 12 of said page, to and including the word "claim," in line 22 of said page, and that so amended the bill do pass, and give as the reasons therefor those set out in the report No. 2277 above referred to and made a part hereof.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this bill is simply a reference to the Court of Claims of this case, and that all of the portion of the bill which attempts to guide or direct the court is stricken out of the bill and it is simply a flat, unqualified reference to the Court of Claims.

Mr. PAYNE. Is the defense of the statute of limitations left out?

Mr. GRAFF. That is not left out, but there is a whole lot of other material which was in the bill as introduced, which attempted to instruct the court how to find. That is all left out.

Mr. PAYNE. That is a pretty important part of the bill and I should like to know why we should take away the statute of limitations.

Mr. GRAFF. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. This case, as I understand it, has been before the Court of Claims and all the facts were found excepting the question which the claimants now ask to be presented to the Court of Claims. That is not a question of fact, but it is a question of law, the question of law as to whether the United States Government is responsible for the acts of its agents, where the claimants claim they were unlawfully deprived of their property. Now, the committee recommend that this bill be referred back to the Court of Claims for the determination of the legal question as to liability.

Mr. GRAFF. As well as the facts?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The facts have been found already by the Court of Claims in a former hearing, through a former reference by Congress.

Mr. GRAFF. In my judgment, I would say to the gentleman from Vermont, the court will decide that they have no legal status.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I also think so.

Mr. GRAFF. From an examination on a former occasion I came to that conclusion. That is the reason why we struck out all of that portion of the bill which was calculated to make the court find for the claimants.

Mr. PERKINS. Did the Court of Claims pass on this bill before?

Mr. GRAFF. No; it was simply referred to them, I think, under an act of Congress, in such a way that they need not do anything except make a finding of facts. They had no power to render a judgment of law and there was no judgment rendered. The court never passed on the legal phases of it at all. It seems to me there can be no objection to this.

Mr. PAYNE. Did the court find on this question of the agent of the Government?

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, no. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] was not using that in a legal sense.

Mr. PAYNE. Did they find the fact on that?

Mr. GRAFF. I think they did not find legal agency. They found that the man was acting in an official capacity.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. There is no contention about the fact that the man who is alleged to have deprived them of their property was acting in a legal capacity as consular agent.

Mr. GRAFF. But that, in my judgment, would not make him a legal agent of the Government so as to bind the Government for his torts or illegal acts.

Mr. PAYNE. If we have the facts in respect to that, and these two gentlemen, both of whom are eminent lawyers, believe there is no liability on the part of the Government, why go through the farce of sending the case to the Court of Claims? Why not reject the bill, and let the people who bring claims here that are bogus or that have no foundation or merit understand that Congress is taking a hand in discouraging that sort of thing?

Mr. GRAFF. A little while ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] had great respect for the courts and thought that there was the proper place for the adjudication of legal questions. Now, here is the first opportunity this man has to go to court, and we send him there stripped of every aid excepting what he may have in law without this bill, except the power to have the court pass upon the question.

Mr. PAYNE. "The gentleman from New York" has never favored the reporting of any bill where the gentlemen on the committee have examined into the facts of the case and declare that there is no legal liability on the part of the Government.

The gentleman will remember that the State of Pennsylvania came in here with some war claims a few years ago, and "the gentleman from New York" opposed sending those to the Court of Claims or any other court, as was desired, because he did not believe that Congress ought to give any semblance of standing to a claim that was not a legal liability against the Government.

Mr. GRAFF. I do not know what the gentleman means by "semblance" to a claim from a legal standpoint. A man either has a claim or he has not, and if he has a legal right, he has, and if has no legal right, then he has none.

Mr. PAYNE. My friend, in whose judgment as a lawyer I have the utmost confidence, tells me he thinks there is no legal liability in the case.

Mr. GRAFF. That is a very fine sarcasm. I think there is one better lawyer in the House than I am, and that is the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. I am sorry that the gentleman does not take in earnest what I said.

Mr. GRAFF. I am sure there is one better, and I have always said that.

Mr. PAYNE. I have great confidence in the legal ability of my friend.

Mr. GRAFF. I have had my ambitions and aspirations, but of course I never expect to leap beyond the limitations of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. I would suggest to the gentleman that he had better enlarge his ambition.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside, as amended by the committee, to be favorably reported.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

REFUND OF CERTAIN CUSTOMS DUES.

The next business was the bill (S. 3083) providing for the adjudication of certain claims by the Court of Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, given to the Court of Claims (notwithstanding any statutory bar of limitation, and notwithstanding the requirements of the statutes as to payment under protest, appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury, and notice of suits before bringing suits ordinarily in such cases, as prescribed in Title XXXIV (collection of duties), chapters 6, 7, and 8, Revised Statutes) to hear, try, determine, and render judgment as in an original suit, with right of appeal as in other cases, the claims of J. F. Bailey & Co.; H. E. Collins & Co.; Edgar Thompson Steel Works, Limited; Carnegie Brothers & Co., Limited; James Lee & Co.; Downing Sheldon & Co.; R. F. Downing & Co.; Albany and Rensselaer Iron and Steel Company; Joliet Steel Company; Cleveland Rolling Mill Company; O. L. Garrison, for Vulcan Steel Company and St. Louis Ore and Steel Company; St. Albans Iron and Steel Company; Godeffroy & Co., for the Albany and Rensselaer Iron and Steel Company; Oliver L. Garrison; A. E. Godeffroy & Co.; James Johnston; Clarke, Post & Martin, agents for Springfield Iron Company; Post, Martin & Co., agents for Springfield Iron Company, Springfield Iron Company, of Springfield, Ill., Charles W. Matthews; Harry C. Arbuckle, and Brown Brothers & Co., agents for Charles W. Matthews; E. Samuels & Co.; Henry W. Oliver, jr.; A. H. Childs, agent for Henry W. Oliver, jr.; Lewis, Oliver & Phillips; Schrader & Ellery; Peter Wright & Sons, agents for Cambria Iron Company; Diamond State Iron Company; Brown Brothers & Co. and C. B. Smyth, agents for Diamond State Iron Company; Interstate Improvement and Construction Company; Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, agents for Interstate Improvement and Construction Company; Charles H. and Eugene Odell, agents for Sandusky Rolling Mill and Manufacturing Company and Northern Pacific Railroad Company; Northern Pacific Railroad Company; Drexel, Morgan & Co.; A. H. Barney and Robert Garrett & Son, agents for Northern Pacific Railroad Company; E. S. Wheeler & Co., and Edgemore Iron Company, for refund of import duties paid by them in excess of the duties imposed by law on steel blooms imported by them during the years 1879 to 1882, both years inclusive; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount of such judgment as shall be rendered by the Court of Claims under the provisions of this act: Provided, That the adjudication shall be for such sums only as were paid in excess of legal duty: And provided further, That their petition shall be filed in said court within six months after the passage of this act.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to understand something about this, Mr. Chairman. I understand it is a bill to refund certain duties. I do not know anything about the amount, but I think we ought to have some good reason for it.

Mr. GRAFF. The facts about the bill are very simple. A number of manufacturers in the country, making articles from steel, entered upon the importation of steel blooms, a new form of importing steel. The bloom is a large roll or bar of steel, and there was no known classification of steel imported in that form. There came up a contest before the Board of Appraisers, I believe, or at all events at the port of New York, where, I understand, these steel blooms came into the United States, as to the schedule under which they should be classified.

The question was which of three rates of ad valorem duty they should pay, as I remember it, the three rates being perhaps 45 per cent, 30 per cent, and some other lower rate. The importers contended that it came in under the lower classification. The parties who passed upon the question for the Government held that it came under the middle or medium rate of classification. The evidence before the committee shows that there was a protest as to this classification. Subsequently the same question, as to the rate under which these importations should be classified, was adjudicated under the same law in the Federal courts of the United States.

Under the same law shortly afterwards the Federal courts of the United States held that they properly came under the lesser classification, and that the importers of steel blooms were entitled to recover from the Government the difference between the higher rates which they had been unlawfully compelled to pay and the rates which they were not really bound to pay in fact. This bill is simply to refer these claims to the Court of Claims for the purpose of adjusting to these parties their rights in the premises.

Mr. PAYNE. Why did not they make their protest at the time under the law?

Mr. GRAFF. Well, some of them did make protests. I do not know whether these parties perfected their appeal or not.

Mr. PAYNE. If they had, they would not have had to come to Congress.

Mr. GRAFF. These parties could at that time have gone ahead, but I am told by at least one of the importers, with whom I happen to be personally acquainted, that as a matter of fact they were threatened that if they insisted upon prosecuting an appeal and were not content with the adjudication of it by imposing upon them the schedule rates which were imposed that the higher rate would be imposed—the maximum of the three which had been considered as possibly covering the importations in question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What kind of an officer was that who made such a threat, and who was that officer?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not care to discuss that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. As I understand it, he told this gentleman to keep his mouth shut and pay the rate, which he did; and if he did not keep his mouth shut he would make him pay a higher rate. That is the most extraordinary administration of the tariff law I ever heard of.

Mr. GRAFF. Still, the question for this House is to determine whether these parties shall have the right to recover from the Government the difference between that which they wrongfully were compelled to pay and that which they were legally bound to pay.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will my friend tell the committee how much these claims amount to on their face?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much?

Mr. GRAFF. I think the entire number of claims amount to something like $400,000, provided that these people mentioned in the bill can establish their claims by evidence, and provided that the court, as a matter of law, determines that they are, each one of them, entitled to the amount. Now, then, I myself asked the question why there were so large a number of claimants involved in the bill, and it seems strange that there should be so many covering comparatively such a small amount of money, for it must be remembered that the shipment of steel involved the tying up of an immense amount of capital, and I was told that, for instance, the firm of Ridgely & Co., at Springfield, Ill., one of the claimants, who have about $75,000 involved, that they are represented, in fact, by three or four different people, and the reason for it is that these importations were sometimes made in the name of a bank for the purpose of facilitating their procuring the large amount of money necessary for the purpose of importing goods of this kind and for the manufacture of goods of this character. There are three or four of these names included in cases where, as a matter of fact, there is but one party in real interest, but, of course, as a matter of law, the suit would have to be commenced in the name of the parties who were nominally the importers for the use of the manufacturer himself, for whose use it was really imported.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would ask my friend from Illinois if this is a proper provision to be contained in a bill like this, carrying so large an amount for adjudication? You say it is $400,000?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not think it is that much. That is the very maximum. I have been told by gentlemen who are familiar with the matter that it will not probably reach $350,000. In my endeavor to give you all the truth, I stated it as I did.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I asked you the face value of the claims, and you said $400,000. But that is not the matter I wanted to call your attention to. Does not my friend think that this kind of a provision is, if not unprecedented, a little bit dangerous, to wit:

> And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount of such judgment as shall be rendered by the Court of Claims under the provisions of this act.

In other words, after having adjudicated these claims, the Court of Claims can shut out, as it were, Congress entirely from the consideration of the judgment of the Court of Claims, and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay them outright.

Mr. GRAFF. This is the safest sort of legislation that could be adopted. The House said a little while ago by its action in the Smithmeyer & Pelz case that they would prefer to trust the court rather than themselves—that they were not well equipped themselves to pass upon the question—and I am not sure that I do not think that is true generally. I am quite sure that when a claimant comes here and asks simply for the machinery of the court to have his claims adjudicated under existing law, that certainly he should be allowed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. They have that now.

Mr. GRAFF. With the exception of waiving the statute of limitations and the technical protest.

Mr. PAYNE. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Of course all the evidence in regard to the payment of these duties is in the Government vouchers. The goods were entered at some port; the duty was assessed and paid. They have not got to produce any evidence except what comes from the Government records. Why is not this bill in effect—why does it not have the same result as if it authorized the Treasurer to pay A, B, and C so much money?

Mr. GRAFF. No, it would not.

Mr. PAYNE. Because you take away all the bars of the statute. These men did not protest; they did not bring an action within the time limited, and the only excuse they made for their laches is that somebody said that if they did not pay the rate assessed, but insisted on a lower rate, they would have to pay a still higher rate. Now, the result will be that they will go to the Court of Claims, and you have taken away all the legal defense that the Government has. The evidence can not be controverted, because it is in the record, and the Government is bound and estopped there. So, in effect, it amounts to a mere farce, submitting it to the Court of Claims. It is merely a question for the clerk in the custom-house to figure up and see how much the Government shall pay.

Mr. GRAFF. But the great point in the case remains undetermined.

Mr. PAYNE. What is that?

Mr. GRAFF. Whether these parties paid the wrong amount or the right amount?

Mr. PAYNE. No; because, I understand the gentleman, that none of these parties took the risk of the frown of the collector under the threat to assess a higher amount. One party did protest and under the statute went into the court and got a judgment for the difference. The court said the lower rate was the proper rate, and not the higher rate.

Mr. SIBLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well, if the gentleman from Illinois will yield.

Mr. GRAFF. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SIBLEY. The gentleman from New York is at the head of the great committee that fixes the tariff duties of the United States. Now, when the importers of products into the United States have paid the higher rate of duty than the law provides the money to be refunded to them is simply an act of justice, which I trust the great chairman of that great committee will not deny. He is the last one that ought to stand up and object to a strict construction of the law, the proper rate of duty to be assessed on imports into the United States. I am astonished that the distinguished gentleman should object to this measure.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to have lost sight of the fact that the great Government of the United States has provided a simple way for these people in such cases.

Mr. SIBLEY. These parties protested——

Mr. PAYNE. No; if they did protest and had brought their claims into court they would have received the difference. This bill relieves them from the fact that they did not protest, and it would not be here if they had protested.

Mr. SIBLEY. Does the gentleman wish to say that any importer of goods into the United States has paid a rate of duty that is not a legal rate of duty, and because he has paid that duty he should not have it refunded? Do you hold that that money so paid into the Treasury ought not to be returned to the parties who have the right to claim it, and who are entitled to it? I want to have that settled. I am something of a tariff man myself, but if that is the construction of the gentleman, I should like to know it. I should like to know if after the legal rate is fixed by the committee and some subaltern puts in another rate, which compels the importer to pay a higher rate, he is not entitled to receive a refund of that difference?

Mr. PAYNE. This committee and Congress have provided laws that all these importers understand, every one of them, that if they are assessed an improper duty, there is a simple way in which to recover it back. We give them that opportunity; to be sure, we require them to do something and not to sleep on their rights for ten or twelve years.

Mr. SIBLEY. The gentleman wants the Federal Treasury to reap an advantage in excess of the legal rates of duty.

Mr. PAYNE. I want the claimants against the United States to settle their claims according to law.

Mr. SIBLEY. That is all that is asked by this bill, to refer it to the Court of Claims, to be determined according to law.

Mr. PAYNE. No; you ask us to set aside the statute.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York is standing, of course, on the strict legal right of the Government. Two things are absolutely sure, two facts that can not be denied. First, there is in the Treasury of the United States money illegally collected by the United States officers from citizens of the United States; secondly, that money has been in the United States Treasury ever since 1889. Whatever use it was capable of being put to, the United States Government has had the benefit of it. Now, certain parties from whom these collections were made went into court and it was determined that the collections were illegal. The proposition here is that the United States shall put all parties in the like situation, those who sued and those who did not. They are all in like condition except this, that one of the parties took advantage of the legal proceedings promptly and the other relied upon the good sense and good conscience of Congress for justice.

There is no possible defense here, except the most technical defense in the world. It is admitted that the United States has the money belonging to these citizens—has had the use of it all these years; and now it is proposed that it shall keep that money because the parties did not make a protest—the merest technicality.

Mr. HEPBURN. How do you know that a mistake has been made? The Government officers fixed a rate of duty; the other parties to the transaction confessed, by not making their protest, that that rate of duty was right.

Mr. DALZELL. No——

Mr. HEPBURN. So that all the parties have agreed that the right rate was fixed.

Mr. DALZELL. No; I think the gentleman misunderstands.

Mr. HEPBURN. The only way that an importer can dissent from the rate of duty which the officer imposes is by filing his protest; and where he fails to do that it amounts to a consent that the rate fixed is the right one. A great many years have elapsed since this transaction; and now these gentlemen want another "hold." That is all there is in it.

Mr. DALZELL. I think my friend from Iowa does not understand the situation. Here A, B, C, and D are all in like condition; they are all importers of certain materials. The Government imposed in each case a certain rate of duty.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to say that these parties are not all in the same condition; and I appeal to the importer—the man who was content with the rate—who did not protest.

Mr. DALZELL. Still I have not made myself understood; the gentleman does not catch my idea. Here is a class of persons, consisting of a number of men, whom we will designate A, B, C, and D. They are all importers of certain materials upon which the Government levies the same rate of tax. Now, instead of A, B, C, and D all going into court, A goes into court and contests the case for the whole of them; and the court decides that in his case the money was illegally exacted. If it was illegally exacted from him, it was illegally exacted from the others. They are all in like condition, so far as that matter is concerned. The only difference is that one of them went into court, and the others did not. But when A's case was decided, it was a test case; and it decided the equity of all the cases and fixed the rights of the other parties. Some of these parties did not go into court because they were certain that if they did so there would be a higher rate of duty exacted; and, according to the report here, one of these parties actually paid a higher rate of duty.

This bill has been favorably reported a great many times——

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania one question. What does this bill provide with reference to interest? Does it provide that interest shall be paid to these claimants by the Government?

Mr. DALZELL. There is no allowance for interest at all.

Mr. PERKINS. The bill simply provides for repayment——

Mr. DALZELL. Repayment of the amount they actually paid.

Mr. PERKINS. Without any interest?

Mr. DALZELL. That is what the bill provides.

Mr. PERKINS. Then it is right.

Mr. DALZELL. The bill allows the difference between 30 per cent and 45 per cent.

Mr. PERKINS. These claimants are not allowed 50 per cent from the Government for all these years?

Mr. DALZELL. There is no allowance for interest at all.

Mr. PERKINS. It is simply for repayment of the amount overpaid?

Mr. DALZELL. Simple repayment of the illegal exaction.

Mr. HEPBURN. But if they had protested, these parties would have had their 6 per cent interest.

Mr. DALZELL. I suppose so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] to yield to me.

Mr. GRAFF. Very well, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee five minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to be recognized in my own right; but if I can not get such recognition, I will accept the five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has control of the floor.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Have I not any right to time of my own?

Mr. GRAFF. I will say to the gentleman that I will yield him more time if he wishes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All right.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am very anxious to pay every honest claim that this Government owes. The Government of the United States pays her debts to private individuals very slowly. No one will deny that. But when she pays, she pays liberally.

Now, what is this bill? What are these claims? Here are a number of importers of steel rails or steel products, we are informed. It is not stated that they paid all of this tax under protest. Indeed, it does not appear that any one of the claimants paid under "protest." Those who did not pay under protest, if any, and those who did pay under protest, are all mixed together.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when a claim is paid without any protest being made at the time, it is considered a legal payment, and the party has no right in law to recover. Yet not a single one of the distinguished gentlemen who are trying to pass this bill have put a finger on a single claimant and said that that claimant had paid his tariff under protest.

Now, why have they mixed up those who have paid under protest, if there are any, with those who did not pay under protest? Why this omnibus bill? Why one bill for all these claims? Why no explanation of each claim? The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] says that this bill is to recover duties "illegally collected." They were collected by the regular officers in the regular way we must presume. He told them what the law was. The law fixed the rate and he executed the law. They paid it voluntarily. They abided by his decision for years—about thirteen, I think.

Now, I say they have no standing here. It seems to me—and I do not want to be captious about this—that the distinguished gentlemen should have put their fingers on the names of the claimants who paid under protest and those who did not. Again, they refer this matter to the Court of Claims, and I think very properly; but we should in this class of cases have the claims and the opinions of the court brought back to us before payment.

I have objection to that part of the bill which orders the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the judgment of the Court of Claims without the further intervention of Congress.

In other words, if a judgment of $400,000 is rendered, the Treasury of the United States is ordered by the lines in the last page of this bill that I have already read to pay those claims without a further appropriation from or action of Congress. There is no question but what the Court of Claims is capable of passing on this matter, but we know that Congress repeatedly refuses to pay the claims that are passed upon by the Court of Claims, because Congress thinks that they should not be paid.

If that provision is eliminated from the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the claim as soon as it is adjudged by the Court of Claims, so that Congress shall have a chance to pass upon the claim itself, there would be some guard thrown around the Treasury; but as it is, there is absolutely none. The Court of Claims settles the question and the Secretary of the Treasury must pay it immediately, whether Congress would have paid it if it were to look into the matter or not. Not one of the merits of these claims have been explained. This should be done in each case. We have taken it for granted that some were paid under protest and some were not. I am rather impressed with the idea that a great many of them were voluntarily paid. I would ask my friend from Illinois how many of those claims were paid under protest.

Mr. GRAFF. There was a protest. They all protested, but not in legal form.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My friend is too good a lawyer to say that that is a protest.

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman uses the word "protest." I would say that there was a conflict between them all regarding the subject of discussion.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Was there a single legal protest made when those duties were paid?

Mr. GRAFF. There were a number of them. The fact is, if they had imposed the highest rates of duty which were threatened to be imposed in certain cases, it would have amounted to a confiscation of the importation itself and would have wronged some of these parties.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, if they protested, why did they not appeal to the Department?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, let me say to my friend from Tennessee that "protest" in its application to this particular state of facts has two different meanings. There is a protest which is a technical protest provided for by the statute. Now, some of these parties made their protest, went into court, and got a decision in their favor.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many did this, and who?

Mr. DALZELL. Others only protested, denying the right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If they got a decision in their favor, why do you want to go to the Court of Claims?

Mr. DALZELL. We do not want to, so far as those are concerned. We want to so far as the others are concerned, who did not go to the court.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is there a claimant in this bill whose claims were paid under protest sued on and judgment recovered? I understand the gentleman to say there is?

Mr. DALZELL. There is nobody in this bill at all that recovered. It is for the relief of the parties who did not recover.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I say, in all fairness, and I shall conclude with this statement, that when $400,000 are to be paid out to these people who were intelligent enough to protest under law at the time and who did not, who were able physically, mentally, and morally and had the legal right to protest and who did not, we at least should eliminate the provision which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay these judgments outright upon the finding of the Court of Claims.

These claimants paid this tariff tax. They added the amount of this tax to the price of their goods and sold them, sold the goods, and in this way got their tax or tariff money back into their fat pocketbooks. What have they lost? This is a peculiar class of claims, unlike the ordinary claim, where property is taken and not returned. Hence we should be cautious in paying this class of claims.

The provision of which I complain and which I think, under the circumstances, should be eliminated from the bill, is this:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount of such judgment as shall be rendered by the Court of Claims under the provisions of this act.

I want to ask my friend from Illinois if that is not an unusual provision?

Mr. GRAFF. Not at all. It is a very usual proceeding.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When has such a bill as this, in such a case as this, passed this House?

Mr. GRAFF. If it were a case where we were in doubt concerning the facts, and desired to refer it to the Court of Claims to have that court make a finding of facts and return it to this House, so that we might take those facts and reach our own conclusions as to the amount due, in such a case as that we would not have any provision in the bill for enforcing the judgment after it was obtained.

But here the simple proposition is this: Did these parties pay more than the legal amount of tariff upon the goods which they imported? How much in quantity of those goods were imported in that manner? What was the difference between the amount of tariff paid and the amount which was legally due under the law? That difference being ascertained upon the amount of goods imported, if that conclusion is reached by the court, a conclusion both of law and of fact, then the court will render a judgment.

This is simply a proposition to have the court ascertain under the law whether there was a certain amount of money paid unlawfully into the United States Treasury which now belongs in law to these parties. We simply give the parties this instrumentality for the purpose of having that question investigated, the court being unhampered except by the law, and to render a judgment and have it paid. If there is not any money in the United States Treasury which was wrongfully paid under the law by these importers into that Treasury, then of course the court will render a judgment against the plaintiffs. There is no instruction in this bill to find for the plaintiffs.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In a case like this, where the party does not protest, where he pays the rate that the officer says is leviable and collectible upon the article, is that an illegal payment? My friend has stated what the Court of Claims will be called upon to find, but not all of the things. One of the questions is whether these parties paid these duties voluntarily or not. If they paid them voluntarily, and the Court of Claims finds that as a fact, then should the Court of Claims adjudge that the money should be refunded? That is the way we understand the bill over on this side. We have no bill or report and we could not hear the Clerk distinctly when he read it, nor the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] who reports it. Certainly the question of voluntary or involuntary payment should be passed on by the court.

Mr. HOPKINS. If my friend will allow me, would not this be a better way to put it——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Possibly, for your side.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the Congress passed a law fixing a certain rate of duty to be imposed, and the customs officer at the port of New York exacted a different rate, ought Congress to exact the rate fixed by the custom-house officer or the rate fixed by law?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why, of course the rate fixed by law; but the gentleman is accused of being a good lawyer, and I confess it for him——

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, all this is simply to fix it so that the law of the land will be administered in the collection of the amount of duty imposed, rather than the exaction that was enforced by the officer in violation of the law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not in violation of the law at all. Now will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope you will give me two or three minutes more.

Mr. GRAFF. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the court finds these claims were all paid voluntarily, can the Court of Claims find in favor of the claimants?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is not the proposition.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Did not the foreigner pay the tax?

Mr. HOPKINS. The proposition is whether this Congress will seek to enforce the keeping of the money that was taken from these parties by a custom-house officer in violation of the law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who paid the duty in this case?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is not the proposition. I take the gentleman's statement. He says it is a tax. On the gentleman's own assumption these people ought to get it back.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell me who paid the duty in these cases?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is not necessary for me to make that statement. I will take yours for that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Was it paid by the foreigner in this case?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAFF. I was surprised to find the gentleman from Tennessee is not only in favor of a high tariff, but in favor of a higher one than the law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is very hard to administer a Republican tariff act. That is the trouble.

Mr. GRAFF. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that, stripped of all the flow of language, this case resolves itself into about this: The Government of the United States, having supreme power over the question of the introduction of foreign goods into our markets, fixed the price upon which importations can be made. Certain importers came into the country with their property. The Government of the United States seizes possession of it and holds it with a lien upon it for a charge of duty fixed by the law of the country, and then finally surrenders it after they have seized from the importer an illegal rate of duty. Then he has got his property; and ultimately the Government stands admitting that by a process not of intentional highway robbery, but accidental highway robbery, they have taken a lot of money out of the pocket of the importer that the law did not authorize, and this importer comes to the tribunal that is alone vested with power to do the right thing to the citizen, and when he comes with his case it is set up against him that he did not protest in the right language.

How much better is the Government thus championed than the robber who seizes your pocketbook and then tells you that in your demand for it you did not use the right phrase when you asked him to hand it back? What is the difference in morals between a seizure under pretence of law from the importer and seizure from the individual by the robber? I do not believe that this Government can afford to stand upon a technicality of that character. All the facts in the case stand admitted. First, the importation; second, the overcharge; third, the payment; fourth, that it has never been paid back. It is the money of the importer in the pocket of the Government, and it ought to be refunded in the shortest possible process that an honest man would refund money under like circumstances.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman who has just taken his seat a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Were these duties paid illegally?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question or two.

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman from Maine has asked me a question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will you yield to me?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not want to discuss the question of high tariff and the still higher one advocated by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I want to ask the gentleman two or three questions, so that I may be better able to vote intelligently upon the bill.

Mr. GRAFF. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. How many years does it show they were paying this extra duty of 15 per cent?

Mr. GRAFF. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to answer that question.

Mr. DALZELL. This schedule extended over the years 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Some three or four years?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. And these men paid this duty?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. The duty was added to the cost of the article?

Mr. GRAFF. I can not tell you about that.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. And they used the steel and manufactured it, and we poor fellows paid the price, and so did the people all over the country.

Mr. GRAFF. I think that is not true. On the contrary, these people shipping steel in the form of blooms discovered that it was unprofitable. It had never been done prior to that time. As I understand, it was imported in that form in the hope that they would secure a classification under the tariff which would give them a reasonable rate, and the importation in blooms made it easier to ship and handle it; but they discovered it could not be profitably done, and it ceased. It was during this period of three years that these importations took place—this controversy about which of the three rates should properly apply under the law occurred; but since that time, as I understand it, no blooms have been imported. Prior to that time none had been imported.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. They continued this importation some three or four years.

Mr. GRAFF. I think the record shows it was three or four years.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Is it reasonable to suppose that they would have continued so long if the rate of duty was not right?

Mr. DALZELL. It was not the same parties.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. And during all that time they never filed any protest.

Mr. DALZELL. But the duty continued during 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882, and applies to different people.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I understand something about the collection of duties, having fortunately or unfortunately been a collector of customs where we collected some duties. It is an easy matter to file a protest. There is often a very great doubt as to what the real duty is on an article. If the party sees fit not to pay it, if he is not satisfied with the duty that the collector or appraiser puts upon it, he has simply to file a written protest, and the matter goes to the Secretary of the Treasury, and then the importer can bring suit afterwards and get his money back.

Mr. GRAFF. But that involves the payment of the duty.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Yes; but he gets it right back.

Mr. GRAFF. He gets it right back when there is a final adjudication of the case. It involves the payment of a large sum of money. In some of these cases I happen to know—one of them, at least, in the State of Illinois, where they were people who were not well able to advance great sums of money as are involved in this question—it ties up large sums of money.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. They have to pay the duty anyhow, but they did not file a written protest. Had they filed a written protest they would have had the matter heard and have got their money back. They have waited thirteen years——

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, no; they have not.

Mr. DALZELL. They have been knocking at the doors of Congress ever since.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. They have waited thirteen years, or, at any rate, thirteen years have elapsed.

Mr. GRAFF. No; they did not wait, they began immediately.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. They did not see fit to take the simple, plain way that the law prescribes in which you may recover duty that you think you ought not to pay. I think we may fairly presume that they charged their customers the additional duty, and that the customers, rather than the importers, are the persons out of the pockets of whom the additional duty has to come. Had these importers taken the necessary steps they could have ascertained, probably within a month or two, the fact that they were paying too much.

Mr. GRAFF. You think, as a protectionist, that the consumer always pays the tax?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I think that when you import an article and add 45 per cent duty that you sell it for 45 per cent more than you would if you did not pay the duty.

Mr. GRAFF. You do, if you can. But you have to sell it in competition with all other steel products.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. There are probably millions of dollars in the United States Treasury that have been paid in where a different rate of duty might have been paid if it had been carried up under protest. I do not know if gentlemen get my idea. If the importer adds the price of duty to the article, the consumer has to pay that additional price, and so the consumer pays the duty, and not the importer.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is good Democratic doctrine.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. It is a pretty fair doctrine. I say that the consumer pays the additional duty if he can not buy it at a less rate in the market.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by striking out that portion of it which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the judgments as soon as the Court of Claims adjudicates them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 8, strike out the following:
"And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount of such judgment as shall be rendered by the Court of Claims under the provisions of this act."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if this bill passes it will put this matter entirely beyond the control of Congress. Here is a bill carrying a reference to the Court of Claims and appropriating the money at the same time to pay every dollar of the claims allowed by this court. It seems to me that if these doubtful claims should be allowed by the Court of Claims they should be sent back to Congress, as nine-tenths of the judgments of that court are, so that Congress can pass upon whether or not it will pay these claims. Hence I make the motion, Mr. Chairman, not captiously at all, but that that part may be stricken out, so that Congress can pass upon the merits of these claims, since we know nothing about them here to-day, not even a report being here to inform this body of the merits or demerits of any one of these twenty or thirty claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. GRAFF. I hope that everybody will vote "no."

The question having been taken,

The CHAIRMAN. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 33, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has a quorum voted?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a quorum voting. The question is now upon laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was decided in the affirmative.

WILLIAM LEECH.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5357) for the relief of William Leech.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to William Leech the sum of $10,000 as full compensation for permanent injuries received by the said Leech in falling in the elevator shaft of the Treasury building, without any contributary negligence and while in discharge of his official duties, on the 29th day of March, 1888; and an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Claims was read, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out "$10,000" and insert "$2,500."

Mr. GRAFF. I move that the amendment be agreed to, and the bill as amended be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to hear some explanation of the bill.

Mr. GRAFF. I will give an explanation, if it is desired.

Mr. Leech is the gentleman employed upon one of the elevators in the Treasury Department. He has been there for a number of years. He is a widower with three small children. A good many gentlemen here will remember him as having charge of the elevator at the entrance nearest to the corner made by Pennsylvania avenue sweeping around the Treasury Department.

Without asking for the reading of the report, I will state the circumstances of the case; for we have examined into the matter very exhaustively. This man was in the habit of going up into the Treasury building and stepping into the elevator and commencing his morning duty. It was the duty of the janitor to leave the elevator at that floor in such a position that Mr. Leech could walk into it. It had been the unvarying custom through a number of years for the lights—the electric lights, I suppose—in that vicinity to be turned on in the morning. In this case the janitor left the sliding door or entrance to the elevator shaft open, but the elevator was lowered to the bottom of the shaft; so that Mr. Leech, coming up early in the morning, when it was somewhat dark—so dark that he was unable to see into the doorway of the elevator shaft—stepped into what he supposed was the elevator itself, and fell a distance of one-story down the shaft, receiving the injuries stated in the bill.

Mr. Leech has had this claim pending in the House through a period of some three or four years. I have had occasion to visit the Treasury Department every week on business of my constituents; I have constant business with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and other officers, as no doubt, many other members have. I usually take this elevator, because it is the most convenient; hence I have seen this man every week for the past two or three years, and every time I have seen him his condition has impressed me and filled me with sympathy. He is not in a condition to-day to be performing the duty that he is performing; he is simply doing it because he has no other service, and the Secretary of the Treasury keeps him there because of the fact that he has faithfully performed his duty for some years, and he has no means accumulated enabling him, otherwise than from this position, to meet the responsibility of supporting his small children, who are without any mother to aid in their support.

Mr. Leech has insisted upon receiving $5,000. This bill, as introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN

SMITH], proposed to pay $10,000. Of course there is no Representative from this district to whom Mr. Leech could go.

I have examined this man. He is not able to walk without the assistance of two canes, and even then he walks with great difficulty. He is performing his service in the elevator there, as some of you have seen him no doubt, sitting down all the time; and this service is performed with great pain and tends to aggravate his injuries.

The committee has cut down the amount specified in the bill to $2,500, which it is proposed to pay this man "as full compensation for permanent injuries received" by him "in falling in the elevator shaft of the Treasury building, without any contributory negligence on his part and while in the discharge of his official duty."

The report itself contains a letter from Mr. Gage, who was then Secretary of the Treasury, addressed to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], who was at that time a member of our committee, and who made a favorable report on the bill. I will read the letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 8, 1901.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, transmitting the bill (H. R. 786) now before your committee, for the relief of William Leech, together with the report of the Senate committee on a similar bill. You request an expression of my opinion as to the merits of this case.

Without saying what amount ought or ought not to be allowed to this claimant, I will merely recite the facts in the case so far as known to the Department, and from them the committee will no doubt reach a just conclusion.

Mr. Leech, on attempting to enter the elevator in the southeast corner of the Treasury building March 29, 1893, was injured by falling down the shaft, a distance of one story, from the basement to the subbasement. He was severely injured, as fully described in the papers transmitted with your letter. At the time of the accident, for a long time before, and ever since Mr. Leech had been an elevator conductor. The injury was received on the elevator to which he was accustomed, which had been in his charge for years. His case might, therefore, be looked upon in somewhat different light than that of a man not similarly employed nor in charge of that particular elevator.

The papers in the case are returned herewith, and your attention is invited to an indorsement signed by Mr. W. H. Hills, acting chief clerk, who was familiar with the circumstances of Mr. Leech's action and made an investigation immediately following it.

I find, also, that he was absent from the Department during 1893 a total of ninety-one days. Of this he was allowed thirty days as annual leave and sixty days as sick leave—in all, ninety days for which he received pay, so that his loss in time was one day. His record for sick leave has been good ever since, and he is still regarded as capable of managing an elevator, and is thus now employed on the one at the northeast corner of the Treasury building.

That is true, but it is also true that this man is compelled to manage the elevator or give up the fight of life and his duty to maintain his family. The man has no one to go to to exert any influence over. He is a poor man and he simply came to the committee, and I confess that he enlisted my sympathies, and I think that it is such a case where if a private individual or a corporation had been involved and he the employee and he should sue that the facts are sufficient for him to recover for this injury through the negligence of the defendant.

W. L. Hills, acting chief clerk, makes the following report:

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury with the information that I have carefully read the statements of Mr. William Leech relative to the injury received by him in the Treasury building March 29, 1893, by falling down an elevator shaft, and find that the same correspond with the facts established by me from an investigation made immediately following the accident.

From inquiries made to-day I find that Mr. Leech has to depend upon a cane in going about, but I am unable to state definitely, from personal observation, as to the extent of his injuries, but would place full confidence in any statement that might be made by J. Ford Thompson, M. D., in relation thereto.

I am of the opinion that Mr. Leech is physicially injured for life to an extent which would materially interfere with his securing employment outside of the Department.

Now, I have seen this man's condition ever since this accident occurred, and no doubt many of you have. He further says:

While the sum of $5,000 may appear excessive, still, when taking into consideration the fact that some time in the future Mr. Leech will have to relinquish his present position in the Department, either from old age or from his disability, and from the further fact that if it were a case against a railroad company or other large corporation a jury would, in all probability, find a verdict for a larger sum, I am disposed to think that the payment of the amount named, $5,000, would be an equitable settlement of the matter.

But the committee cut the amount to $2,500. We had before us the affidavits of the physicians showing that he is permanently disabled and maimed, and that this affects his general constitution and health and nervous system. He is to-day a wrecked man who ought not to be engaged in the performance of the duty which he is performing, and he is doing it every day to his own injury.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended by the committee amendment was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ESTATE OF M. J. GREALISH.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3502) for the relief of the estate of M. B. Grealish, deceased.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of M. J. Grealish, deceased, late a captain in the United States Army, the sum of $1,180, balance remaining due for service rendered by said Captain Grealish as assistant commissary of subsistence from December 1, 1867, to September 30, 1879.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Amend the bill by striking out the words "December first, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven," in lines 9 and 10, and insert "July fifteenth, eighteen hundred and seventy."

In lines 10 and 11 strike out the words "September thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine," and insert in lieu thereof the words "March twentieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight."

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this bill should be amended so as to conform to the amendment that has already been made. I therefore move that the words in lines 6 and 7, "one thousand one hundred and eighty dollars," be stricken out and that there be substituted in their place the words "seven hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-four cents." When this bill was considered in the Committee on Claims it was agreed to amend the bill as it is presented here, and further it was agreed to amend it in the manner in which I have just suggested. The failure to amend it was undoubtedly an oversight, and for that reason I have made the motion. The facts are all set out in the report, and are as well given there as could be stated by anybody here.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman to make a brief statement of what the bill is for.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Capt. Michael J. Grealish was a soldier in the Regular Army. Beginning some time in the year 1867, he served as an acting commissary of subsistence. An act of Congress, passed a good many years ago, entitled an officer having rank below that of captain to the extra pay of $100 a year when he served as an acting commissary of subsistence. In 1870 Congress passed a supplementary or another law, in which it was provided that officers having rank above that of first lieutenant, and including the rank of captain, were entitled to receive the $100 when acting as a commissary of subsistence. The correspondence with the Department had by the Committee on Claims consisted of a communication signed by the Commissary-General, J. F. Weston, the Acting Paymaster-General of the Army, and by Judge Davis, Judge-Advocate-General of the Army.

Michael J. Grealish served continuously as an acting commissary of subsistence from 1867 to 1885. He brought suit in the Court of Claims and recovered judgment for $600, and it is to remove the bar of the statute of limitations that this bill has been presented, so that he may recover his full pay covering a period of more than thirteen years. There is no doubt, as the Judge-Advocate-General says in his letter to the Committee on Claims, that he performed the service and that he recovered a judgment in the Court of Claims for $600, but was unable to recover the amount owing him because of the imposition of the bar of the statute of limitations by the Government at that time. I will say further to my friend that Judge Davis says, in his communication, that if the bill is amended as was amended by the committee, and as I have proposed to have it amended here, he sees no objection to a favorable report thereon. I state to my friend that it is by reason of these communications and these facts that the committee reported this bill favorably.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. This bill, then, just pays him for the time that the statute barred him from?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes, it covers the period from 1870 to 1877.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is all right.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Seven years, eight months, and some days. The amendment which I have offered is in accordance with the statement of fact made by the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army.

The amendment of Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAYNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Senate concurrent resolution 50.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 1,600 copies of the compilation recently prepared by direction of the Attorney-General, entitled Bills and Debates in Congress Relating to Trusts, of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 100 copies for the use of the Department of Justice; and that the Attorney-General shall cause an index to be prepared to said volume, compensation therefor not to exceed $500.

Senate concurrent resolution 51.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be prepared forthwith, under the direction of the Attorney-General, a compilation of all the decisions of the Supreme Court and of the inferior Federal courts relating to trusts or to the act known as the Sherman antitrust law, of which compilation 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 7,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the Department of Justice.

The committee resumed its session.

HENRY M. HOLMES.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1193) to correct the military record of Henry M. Holmes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the records of the War Department in the case of Henry M. Holmes, late of Company A, First New Mexico Cavalry Volunteers, and issue to him an honorable discharge from said organization.

The following committee amendment was read:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, how does that bill get here to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. This is not a bill to remove a charge of desertion. It is in order under the rule.

Mr. GRAFF. I have not charge of the bill. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to make any remarks?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know anything about it. I only wanted to know how it got here to-day. I supposed it was a bill to remove a charge of desertion.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Let us have some explanation of it.

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] reported the bill. If it is desired to have any explanation, he can make it. If not, I move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. This soldier served almost continuously in the Regular Army from 1851 until 1871, according to the records of the War Department. In 1862, according to those records, he was dismissed the service in order to enable him to accept a commission in the New Mexico volunteers. He was commissioned a lieutenant in the First New Mexico Volunteers, and a short time after, on the 4th of July, 1862, a street brawl occurred at Albuquerque. It was alleged that during this brawl this officer conducted himself in a manner unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.

The evidence is to the effect that in the row, which occurred between soldiers and Mexicans, this officer attempted to separate the combatants. Some of his fellow-soldiers who testified against him claimed that in doing so he did not conduct himself as an officer should, that he put himself on a level with the common soldiers, and that his conduct was prejudicial to the service. He was therefore discharged the service. Immediately after that discharge he reenlisted and served from that time until 1871 as a sergeant-major. He was a good soldier during his entire service of about twenty years. The bill removes the charge of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman and gives him an honorable discharge from the New Mexico regiment of volunteers.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Was this discharge a dishonorable one?

Mr. MONDELL. He was discharged by order of a court-martial, and sentenced to be dismissed from the service. There is no question in my mind, and there was no question in the minds of the members of the committee but that there was a good deal of jealousy and prejudice against this man. Coming from the ranks of the Regular Army as he did, he was not in favor with the officers of this volunteer company. They did not seem to take kindly to the fact that a soldier of the Regular Army was to receive a commission in their company.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Is the report in the case unanimous?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN G. ROSE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2664) for the relief of John G. Rose.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the records of the Navy Department so as to place the name of John G. Rose on the roll as an acting master's mate from the time of his second enlistment, February 10, 1865, to the time of his discharge, January 30, 1868, and to cause an honorable discharge to be delivered to the said Rose as an acting master's mate, to take the place of the discharge as seaman which he now holds.

SEC. 2. That the proper accounting officer of the Treasury Department be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to open and adjust the account of John G. Rose as an officer in the United States Navy, and to allow and pay to him the difference between the pay of seaman and acting master's mate from February 10, 1865, to January 30, 1868.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the member of the Committee on Naval Affairs who reported this bill, is not here. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], who introduced the bill, is here.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VANDIVER], who reported the bill in the last Congress, is here.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Missouri know anything about the facts?

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, I can only say that in the Fifty-sixth Congress I, as a member of a subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported this bill to the committee, and the committee reported it to the House, but it was not reached on the Calendar.

I can not say at this time that I am perfectly familiar with all the details of the case; but I remember, in a general way, after investigating the matter I became convinced that it was perfectly proper and just that this bill should pass. I conversed with Mr. Rose himself and was impressed with the candor and honesty of the man. The bill proposes to restore to Mr. Rose his rank of master's mate, and with that the difference between the pay of a master's mate and an ordinary seaman for a term of about three years—I think from 1865 to 1868. The bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Fiftieth Congress, again in the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, and Fifty-third Congresses, and then again in the Fifty-sixth Congress. It is now reported favorably by this Committee.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PARKER. I think I will answer the question the gentleman may desire to ask. John G. Rose was a master's mate in the United States Navy. There was a standing order that any master's mate who reenlisted at the end of his term of service should retain the same rank.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What kind of an order?

Mr. PARKER. A standing order of the Navy Department that any master's mate who reenlisted immediately at the expiration of his term of service should retain the rank of master's mate and be reenlisted as master's mate. Rose stayed from his first enlistment without reenlistment for a month or so.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Exhausted his privilege.

Mr. PARKER. Exhausted his privilege. Then, after remaining about a month or so after discharge, he reenlisted, expecting to receive the same rank. Instead of that, he was rated as an ordinary seaman. He always reported and insisted upon his rating as a master's mate. He greatly excited the interest of my predecessor [Mr. Lehlbach], who was a most careful man, and the bill, I think, once passed through both the House and the Senate, but did not get through with the President.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Was it vetoed by the President?

Mr. PARKER. No. I was in error; it did not get through the Senate. But it went first through one House and then through the other at different terms, but never got all the way. The simple question in this bill is the difference in the amount of pay as master's mate and as ordinary seaman, and the report in his favor in the matter in the Fifty-first Congress was signed by Mr. C. A. Boutelle, Mr. H. A. Herbert. Mr. WILLIAM ELLIOTT, Mr. W. McAdoo, Mr. H. W. Rusk, Mr. William B. Wallace, and Mr. J. P. DOLLIVER, after full consideration of the question. It had the recommendation of one gentleman who became Secretary of the Navy, one who became Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and two gentlemen who were in different Congresses chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. The statement of the Auditor of the Navy is that the difference is $834 and some cents.

I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the respective bills to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEMENWAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills on the Private Calendar and had directed him to report some back without amendments, some with amendments, and had also directed him to report sundry bills with the recommendation that they be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

CAPT. B. H. M'CALLA AND OTHERS.

The first business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 11576) granting permission to Capt. B. H. McCalla and others to accept presents and decorations tendered to them by the Emperor of Germany and others.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JULIUS A. KAISER.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (H. R. 6649) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN G. ROSE.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (H. R. 2664) for the relief of John G. Rose.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. TREADWELL.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3787) to grant honorable discharge to William A. Treadwell.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIS BENEFIELD.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2559) for the relief of Willis Benefield.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MIERS of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WILLIAM LEECH.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (H. R. 5357) for the relief of William Leech.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

M. J. GREALISH.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3502) for the relief of the estate of M. J. Grealish, deceased.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

HENRY M. HOLMES.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1193) to correct the military record of Henry M. Holmes.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; was read the third time, and passed.

ADJUDICATION OF CERTAIN CLAIMS BY COURT OF CLAIMS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (S. 3083) providing for the adjudicating of certain claims by the Court of Claims.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF AARON VAN CAMP AND VIRGINIUS P. CHAPIN.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 342) for the relief of the heirs of Aaron Van Camp and Virginius P. Chapin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time; was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS LAID ON THE TABLE.

The following Senate and House bills and joint resolution, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that they lie on the table, were severally read and the recommendation of the committee agreed to:

S. 1670. An act granting permission to Capt. B. H. McCalla, United States Navy, to accept a decoration tendered to him by the Emperor of Germany;

S. R. 28. Joint resolution granting permission to Dr. Eugene Wasdin and Dr. H. D. Geddings, both of the United States Marine-Hospital Service, to accept decorations tendered to them by the Italian Government;

S. 1956. An act granting permission to Lieut. Gen. John M. Schofield, retired, United States Army, to accept the decoration of the Cross of Commander of the National Order of the Legion of Honor, conferred upon him by the President of France;

S. 1958. An act granting permission to Capt. C. DeW. Willcox, United States Army, to accept the diploma and decoration of Officier d'Académie, awarded to him by the Government of France;

S. 1954. An act to authorize Capt. N. M. Brooks, Superintendent of Foreign Mails, Post-Office Department, to accept a decoration tendered him by the Emperor of Germany;

S. 1955. An act to authorize George W. Hill, Chief of the Division of Publications of the Department of Agriculture, to accept a decoration tendered to him by the Government of the French Republic;

S. 1957. An act granting permission to Mr. Hubbard T. Smith, secretary of the United States commissioner to China and consular clerk of the United States, to accept a decoration conferred upon him by the Government of China;

S. 1959. An act granting permission to Capt. Stephen L'H. Slocum, United States Army, to accept a medal conferred upon him by the King of England;

S. 1960. An act granting permission to Lieut. W. P. Scott, United States Navy, to accept a medal of merit presented to him by the Sultan of Turkey; and

H. R. 678. A bill for the relief of the heirs of the late Charles P. Culver.

On motion of Mr. GRAFF, a motion to reconsider the several votes whereby the bills were passed, where no specific motion was made for reconsideration, was laid on the table.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate concurrent resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 50:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 1,600 copies of the compilation recently prepared by direction of the Attorney-General, entitled "Bills and Debates in Congress Relating to Trusts," of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 100 copies for the use of the Department of Justice; and that the Attorney-General shall cause an index to be prepared to said volume, compensation therefor not to exceed $500—

to the Committee on Printing.

Senate concurrent resolution 51:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be prepared forthwith under the direction of the Attorney-General a compilation of all the decisions of the Supreme Court and of the inferior Federal courts relating to trusts or to the act known as the Sherman antitrust law, of which compilation 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 7,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the Department of Justice—to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, for two days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. WOOTEN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. THAYER, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to the necessity of additional land for the Moapa Indians of Nevada—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of inspectors of disbursements by officers of the Army during the past fiscal year—to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 6, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee appointments:

Mr. BUTLER of Missouri, to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department and the Committee on Mileage.

Mr. FLANAGAN of New Jersey, to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SWANN of New York, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Mr. BILLMYER of Pennsylvania, to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. RUSSELL of Texas, to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. GLASS of Virginia, to the Committee on Pacific Railroads and the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BURGESS of Texas, to the Committee on Pensions.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15593) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. METCALF in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of House bill 15593.

Mr. BARNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BARNEY. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that this bill carries practically the same amount of appropriation as the pension bill of last year. The appropriation for the payment of invalid pensions is exactly the same, being $138,500,000. The only difference in this bill as compared with the last is, in the first place, an increase of something like $1,200 for the payment of rent of the pension agency here in the city of Washington. The old building having been condemned, it became necessary to move into new quarters, where the rent is increased. There is likewise an increase of $5,000 for stationery and incidentals, an expenditure made necessary, as claimed, by the fact that if certain mechanical appliances should be purchased, the office would be enabled to make its calculations more rapidly and cheaply, so that in the end a considerable amount of money would be saved.

I would say further, Mr. Chairman, that there is no new legislation in this bill, except on page 3, where we have inserted the word "hereafter," which will make permanent certain legislation which was enacted one year ago (having been put on by an amendment in the Senate) prohibiting the receiving of compensation for securing the passage of special pension bills through Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In what line on page 3 does that change appear?

Mr. BARNEY. In line 8. The word "hereafter" has been there inserted for the purpose of making that legislation permanent, there being some question whether it would be permanent without that change.

Now, if there are no further questions to be answered, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed and the bill be read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I wish to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether any part of the appropriation made last year for pensions has been covered back into the Treasury, as was the case with the appropriation of the previous year?

Mr. BARNEY. Only a very small amount has been covered back. The amount of last year's appropriation was just about sufficient for the payment of pensions. I have not the exact figures, but we have been told that there was only about $6,000 appropriated beyond the amount which has proved sufficient for the payment of pensions and the expenses of pension agencies. Of the appropriation for the prior year $5,000,000 was turned back.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. For the fiscal year 1901 somewhere between five and six million dollars was turned back into the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that general debate be now closed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Clerk will now read the bill by paragraphs, under the five-minute rule, for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. METCALF, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15593) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF WAGNER AGAINST BUTLER.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report and resolution of the Committee on Elections No. 2 in the contested-election case of Wagner against Butler, for the Twelfth district of Missouri, and give notice that it will be called up for consideration on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. This will be referred to the House Calendar and printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order against this measure and do not consent that it is privileged.

LONDON DOCK BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota demands the regular order, which will be the call of committees. The call rests with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the unfinished business being what is known as the London dock bill, in respect to which the gentleman from Minnesota has one hour yielded to him by the gentleman in charge of the bill, Mr. FLETCHER, of Minnesota, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] had seventeen minutes remaining. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, before I speak to the bill I wish to ask those representing the minority of the committee if it would not be possible at this time to agree upon a time when the vote shall be taken, and then divide the time for discussion equally between those in favor and those against the bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the views of the minority upon this bill were presented by Mr. SHERMAN, who is now absent from the city. I am just informed by a colleague of his that he is on his way here, but has been detained by the inclement weather, because of a snowstorm. He will not be here until some time between 4 and 5 o'clock this afternoon. I think that for a correct understanding of a matter of this importance it is proper that Mr. SHERMAN should be here. I therefore ask the gentleman from Minnesota to let this matter pass over until he can be here. He is thoroughly conversant with the subject, he prepared the report, and he can be more useful to the House in arriving at a correct conclusion than any other person. Therefore I think it is only fair that he should have an opportunity to get here. It is not his fault that he is not present. He started in time, but has been delayed by the storm.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the understanding was that this bill was to be taken up on Wednesday with the demand for the regular order, but unfortunately Mr. SHERMAN was unexpectedly called to New York on Tuesday evening, and I was asked by the friends of Mr. SHERMAN to allow it to go over until Friday. I then consented that there would be no demand for the regular order, as far as I was concerned, for the purpose of considering this bill until Friday. With that understanding the House adjourned over from Wednesday until Friday. Yesterday the Committee on Claims, having that day set apart by the rules for the consideration of bills reported from that committee, occupied the entire day. I knew nothing about the absence of Mr. SHERMAN until this morning. Now, the House was convened to-day, or there was no adjournment over until Monday taken yesterday, because it was understood that the opportunity would be given to-day for the consideration of this bill and that Mr. SHERMAN would be here. I do not want to take advantage of Mr. SHERMAN or of any other man in this House; but in view of all these facts I can not well see how I can consent to permit the bill to go over unless the House will give unanimous consent that this bill may be taken up on Monday immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that Monday is set apart for District day, and I shall object unless some other day is set apart for District day.

Mr. TAWNEY. The whole week will probably be occupied with business.

Mr. PAYNE. I think not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BINGHAM. We will not be ready with the legislative bill until about Thursday.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is a special order set for Wednesday, and Monday will be occupied by District business. That will leave only Tuesday.

Mr. PAYNE. Why not take Tuesday?

Mr. HEPBURN. A parliamentary inquiry. Is it competent now to raise the question of consideration?

Mr. TAWNEY. That question was raised when the bill was called up at the last session.

Mr. HEPBURN. This is another day.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to both gentlemen that the bill might go over until Tuesday, and an agreement be made to take a vote at a certain hour on that day. I do not see that there is anything else to come before the House on Tuesday. Nothing is likely to come up that will interfere with this bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal on Tuesday next and that the vote be taken at half past 4 o'clock, the time to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. BABCOCK. I may be able to aid the House and the gentlemen concerned in this bill by offering an amendment to that request, that the day be made Monday instead of Tuesday, and that the Monday following be set aside for District day instead of next Monday. That will give the gentlemen Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] asks unanimous consent that House bill 9059, the one now being considered by the House, be made the special order for Tuesday next immediately after the approval of the Journal; that the vote be taken at half past 4, and that the time for discussion be equally divided between the two sides. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] asks, as an amendment to this request, that the matter be taken up on Monday next, and that the following Monday be given to the Committee on the District of Columbia instead of next Monday.

Mr. TAWNEY. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that the gentleman from Minnesota has already occupied about one hour in favor of this bill, and that no time has been occupied in opposition to the bill. It seems to me that the gentleman lacks his usual modesty in wishing to have an even division of the time.

Mr. TAWNEY. The House has very little recollection of the debate that occurred.

Mr. MANN. I could not agree with the gentleman——

Mr. TAWNEY. It was in the interest of fairness——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, as the Chair has already stated, occupied all but seventeen minutes of one hour on the day when this bill was previously under consideration.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am aware of that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object to the request?

Mr. MANN. I object to that portion of the request which relates to the even division of the time. Let the question of the division of time come up later. That can easily be arranged when the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] returns.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to that part of the request which provides for an equal division of the time between the two sides.

Mr. TAWNEY. Inasmuch as the request for postponement has been made in the interest of the friends of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], I would ask if it would be satisfactory to the gentleman from Illinois if the matter of the division of the time be left to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] and myself?

Mr. MANN. Perfectly, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. TAWNEY. Very well, we will omit that from the request.

The SPEAKER. With that understanding, the Chair repeats the question. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the order is made in accordance with the statement of the gentlemen. The Clerk will call the next committee.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

The Committee on the Judiciary was called.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not see the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], chairman of the committee, in his seat. I suppose he will be here in a little while. I have a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, and I am authorized by that committee to call up that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up his bill.

AMENDMENT OF ACT TO DIVIDE THE STATE OF TEXAS INTO FOUR JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 15506) to amend section 14 of the act entitled "An act to divide the State of Texas into four judicial districts."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Texas into four judicial districts," passed at the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, approved March 11, 1902, and known as chapter 183, be so amended as that said section 14 shall hereafter read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That the United States circuit and district courts for the western district of Texas shall be held in each year at the times and places as follows:

"At Austin, in the county of Travis, on the fourth Monday of January and the second Monday of June.

"At Waco, in the county of McLennan, on the second Monday of November and the fourth Monday of February.

"At San Antonio, in the county of Bexar, on the third Monday of December and the first Monday of May.

"At El Paso, in the county of El Paso, on the first Monday of October and the first Monday of April."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect on the 31st day of March, A. D. 1903.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LANHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that there are any other bills from the committee of which consideration is desired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has another bill. The Chair is not advised whether he has authority of the committee to call the bill up.

Mr. LANHAM. I understand there is another bill which the chairman of the committee desires to have considered.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the committee is now present. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin.

AMENDING SECTION 828 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I desire to call up House bill 9041.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9041) to amend section 828 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 828 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 828. For issuing and entering every process, commission, summons, capias, execution, warrant, attachment, or other writ, except a writ of venire or a summons or subpœna for a witness, $1.

"For issuing a writ of summons or subpœna, 25 cents.

"For filing and entering every declaration, plea, or other paper, 10 cents.

"For administering an oath or affirmation, except to a juror, 10 cents.

"For taking an acknowledgment, 25 cents.

"For taking and certifying depositions to file, 20 cents for each folio of 100 words.

"For a copy of such deposition furnished to a party on request, 10 cents a folio.

"For entering any return, rule, order, continuance, judgment, decree, or recognizance, or drawing any bond, or making any record, certificate, return, or report, for each folio, 15 cents.

"For a copy of any entry or record, or of any paper on file, for each folio, 10 cents.

"For making dockets and indexes, issuing venire, taxing costs, and all other services, on the trial or argument of a cause where issue is joined and testimony given, $3.

"For making dockets and indexes, taxing costs and all other services, in a cause where issue is joined, but no testimony is given, $2.

"For making dockets and indexes, taxing costs, and other services, in a cause which is dismissed or discontinued, or where judgment or decree is made or rendered without issue, $1.

"For making dockets and taxing costs in cases removed by writ of error or appeal, $1.

"For affixing the seal of the court to any instrument, when required, 20 cents.

"For every search for any particular mortgage, judgment, or other lien, 15 cents.

"For searching the records of the court for judgments, decrees, or other instruments constituting a general lien on real estate, and certifying the result of such search, 15 cents for each person against whom such search is required to be made.

"For receiving, keeping, and paying out money, in pursuance of any statute or order of court, 1 per cent on the amount so received, kept, and paid.

"For traveling from the office of the clerk, where he is required to reside, to the place of holding any court required by law to be held, 5 cents a mile for going and 5 cents for returning, and $5 a day for his attendance on the court while actually in session.

"All papers and books in the offices of the clerks of the circuit and district courts containing the docket or minute of the judgments or decrees thereof shall, during office hours, be open to the inspection of any person desiring to examine or copy the same, without any fees or charge therefor."

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Make the last paragraph of said section, which now reads—

"All books in the offices of the clerks of the circuit and district courts containing the docket or minute of the judgments or decrees thereof shall, during office hours, be open to the inspection of any person desiring to examine the same, without any fees or charge therefor," read as follows, viz:

"Under such rules and regulations as the courts may prescribe, all papers and books in the offices of the clerks of the circuit and district courts containing the docket or minute of the judgments or decrees thereof shall, during office hours, be open to the inspection of, and may be copied by, any person desiring to examine or copy the same, without any fee or charge therefor."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I desire to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to know what becomes of the provision in reference to the fee upon any moneys paid into or out of court? That is a very important item.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Illinois who reported the bill.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Well, Mr. Speaker, I desire to interrogate the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. What gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. JENKINS. My associate, Mr. WARNER.

Mr. WARNER. Well, I will say to the gentleman that my attention has just been called to the bill. I did not know it was to be called up to-day, and I have not thought of it since last session. But I will look over it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I will say for the information of the gentleman, and the gentleman from Illinois, that the question of the fee allowed a clerk of the circuit or district court of the United States for any money received by that clerk, paid into his hands and paid out by him, is a matter of great importance, and I do not want it to be passed over without explanation.

Mr. WARNER. Is that made a part of the bill?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I understand there was a provision of that character.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that this bill may be temporarily laid aside, without prejudice, and that we proceed with other bills from the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Without objection this will be done.

There was no objection.

JURISDICTION OF INDIAN RESERVATIONS IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 10300) conferring jurisdiction upon circuit and district courts for the district of South Dakota in certain cases, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of South Dakota are hereby given jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine all actions and proceedings in which any person shall be charged with the crime of murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary, larceny, or assault with a dangerous weapon committed within the limits of any Indian reservation in the State of South Dakota.

SEC. 2. That any person convicted of the crime of murder, manslaughter, rape, arson, or burglary committed within the limits specified in section 1 of this act shall be subject to the same penalties and punishment as are all other persons convicted of the commission of any of said crimes within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, however, That any Indian who shall commit the crime of rape within the limits of any Indian reservation mentioned in this act shall be punished by imprisonment at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That any person convicted of the crime of assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, or larceny committed within the limits specified in section 1 of this act shall be subject to the same penalties and punishment as are all other persons convicted of either of said crimes under the laws of the State of South Dakota.

SEC. 4. That this act is passed in pursuance of the cession of jurisdiction contained in chapter 105, Laws of South Dakota, 1901.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF MISSOURI.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I desire to call up Senate bill 3316.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 3316) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a new division in the western judicial district of the State of Missouri," approved January 24, 1901.

Be it enacted, etc., That the above-entitled act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That a new division of the western judicial district of the State of Missouri, to be known as the southwestern division of the western district of Missouri, be, and the same is hereby, established, to be composed of the following counties, to wit: Jasper, Newton, Barton, Vernon, Barry, Lawrence, McDonald, and Stone; and said counties be, and the same are hereby, transferred to said southwestern division of said western district of Missouri, but no additional clerk or marshal shall be appointed in or for said division of said district.

"SEC. 2. That terms of the circuit court and of the district court of the southwestern division of the western district of Missouri shall be held at Joplin, in said State, each year, on the first Mondays of January and June after this amended act goes into effect.

"SEC. 3. That the clerk of the district and circuit courts for the southern division of the western district of Missouri and the marshal and attorney of the United States for said district shall perform the duties appertaining to their offices, respectively, for said courts of said southwestern division, and the clerk's office of said courts shall be at Springfield, where all records of said courts may be kept and all duties performed except when court is in session at Joplin; and new books and records shall be provided and opened for the courts herein created; and should the business of said courts, in the judgment of the district judge, hereafter warrant the appointment of a deputy clerk at Joplin, Mo., such deputy clerk may be appointed, to reside and keep his office at Joplin, as well as the books and records pertaining to said division."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS. I would like to yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON].

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman from Missouri says it interferes with his district.

Mr. BENTON. I wish it to be passed for a little while. I did not know it was reported.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire recognition?

Mr. BENTON. I would like to ask that it be passed over for this time.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this will be done.

There was no objection.

AMENDING SECTION 828 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire again to call up House bill 9041. The bill has already been read, and I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] asked a question relating to the 1 per cent allowed clerks for receiving moneys.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I asked whether this bill proposes any change in the present law.

Mr. WARNER. None whatever. The only change proposed is that persons can examine the records at proper times and make copies of them themselves instead of being compelled to pay the clerk for making copies where they want a copy for unofficial purposes or for memoranda which they want; then they may examine the records and make copies. Under the law as it exists now they have no right to make copies of anything from the record, but they must pay for everything.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. This is a privilege that is given?

Mr. WARNER. This is a privilege given attorneys to go in and copy the record for their own information. If they want official copies, of course they must pay the clerk for the certification. It makes no other change in the law.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill again by its title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to amend section 828 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now desire to call up again the bill (S. 3316) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a new division in the western judicial district of the State of Missouri," approved January 24, 1901, which was temporarily laid aside. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] says that he has no objection to the immediate consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Wisconsin that he finds this bill is upon the Union Calendar.

Mr. JENKINS. It carries no appropriation, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. It can not be considered now except by unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. JENKINS. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Missouri says that it is perfectly satisfactory, I will ask unanimous consent of the House for the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent of the House that this bill may be considered now under this order, notwithstanding it is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be reported again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the bill.

The Clerk again read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PREVENTION OF COUNTERFEITING, ETC.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Judiciary Committee I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 13075) to amend section 3 of the "Act further to prevent counterfeiting or manufacturing of dies, tools, or other implements used in manufacturing," etc., approved February 10, 1891.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act further to prevent counterfeiting or manufacturing of dies, tools, or other implements used in manufacturing, and providing penalties therefor, and providing for the issue of such warrants in certain cases," approved February 10, 1891, be, and it hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That every person who makes, or who causes or procures to be made, or who brings into the United States from any foreign country, or who shall have in possession with intent to sell, give away, or in any other manner use the same, any business or professional card, notice, placard, token, device, print, or impression, or any other thing whatsoever, in such likeness or similitude as to design, color, or the inscription thereon, as to be apt for use in counterfeiting the same, of any of the coins of the United States or of any foreign country that have been or hereafter may be issued as money, either under the authority of the United States or under the authority of any foreign government, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not to exceed $100. But nothing in this act shall be construed to forbid or prevent the printing and publishing of illustrations of coins and medals, or the making of the necessary plates for the same, to be used in illustrating numismatic and historical books and journals and the circulars of legitimate publishers and dealers in the same."

The following amendments were recommended by the Judiciary Committee:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "such."

Page 2, line 4, strike out the words "as to be apt for use in counterfeiting the same."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INCORPORATION OF THE ASSOCIATION OF MILITARY SURGEONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Judiciary Committee I desire to call up House bill 15066, to incorporate the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That George M. Sternberg, of the District of Columbia; Presley Marion Rixey, of the District of Columbia; Walter Wyman, of the District of Columbia; Nicholas Senn, of Illinois; Jefferson Davis Griffith, of Missouri; John Van Rensselaer Hoff, of New York; Robert A. Blood, of Massachusetts; Leonard B. Almy, of Connecticut; Nelson H. Henry, of New York; J. Francis Calef, of Connecticut; George Henderson, of the District of Columbia; Charles F. W. Myers, of New Jersey; John V. Shoemaker, of Pennsylvania; Angelo Festorazzi, of Alabama; Edmund C. Brush, of Ohio; Frederick W. Byers, of Wisconsin; James T. Priestley, of Iowa; James Evelyn Pilcher, of Pennsylvania; Marshall O. Terry, of New York; Winslow Anderson, of California; Charles H. Alden, of Pennsylvania; William W. Grant, of Colorado; Robert Harvey Reed, of Wyoming; Thomas C. Clark, of Minnesota; Robert A. Marmion, of the District of Columbia; Miles Standish, of Massachusetts; John C. Wise, of Maryland; George T. Vaughan, of Virginia; Albert H. Briggs, of New York; William C. Borden, of New York; Otis H. Marion, of Massachusetts, and their associates and successors, are hereby created a body corporate and politic in the District of Columbia, by the name of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States, for the purpose of advancing the knowledge of military surgery, medicine, and sanitation in the medical departments of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States and of the militia of the different States, and to increase the efficiency of the different services by mutual association and the consideration of matters pertaining to the medico-military service of the United States in peace and in war.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Surgeon-General of the Army, the Surgeon-General of the Navy, and the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service shall be ex officio members of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States, and, with the president of the association, shall act as an advisory board to the said association.

SEC. 3. That said association is authorized to hold real and personal estate in the United States, so far only as may be necessary to its lawful ends, to an amount not exceeding $100,000, and may adopt a constitution and make by-laws not inconsistent with law, and may adopt a seal and an insignia which may be worn by its members.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, that is all that the Committee on the Judiciary has to report this morning.

AMENDING SECTION 4386, REVISED STATUTES.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees, and when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call up House bill 12002, reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman have authority from the committee to call this bill up?

Mr. MANN. I have.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12002) to amend section 4386 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, striking out "twenty-eight consecutive hours" and "twenty-eight hours" and inserting "forty consecutive hours" and "forty hours."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4386 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and hereby is, amended by striking out, in the sixth and seventh lines, the words "twenty-eight consecutive hours" and inserting in lieu thereof "forty consecutive hours," and by striking out, in the thirteenth and next to the last line, the words "twenty-eight hours" and inserting "forty hours."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COWHERD. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a question in connection with this bill. Is it a bill regulating the shipping of cattle?

Mr. MANN. It is.

Mr. COWHERD. Then I wish to ask whether it is not a fact that this bill has been protested against by many societies of the country on the ground of cruelty to animals?

Mr. MANN. The bill has been pending at different times before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce ever since I have been a member of that committee, and so far as I remember no protest has ever been presented to the committee against the bill. On the contrary, all the live-stock associations have favored it. This morning I called upon the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and asked him whether he had any views with regard to the bill. He stated that he had never heard any protest against the bill, but believed that the live-stock interests were all practically in favor of it, so far as he has ever heard.

The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS]. It has the support of the National Live Stock Association. There were several hearings upon the bill before the committee. There are a great many letters on file from stock raisers and from different associations, including, if I am not mistaken, the live-stock association in the gentleman's own State—all favoring the bill.

A MEMBER. What does the bill provide?

Mr. MANN. It extends the time during which live stock may be kept in cars without unloading from twenty-eight to forty hours.

Mr. COWHERD. I should like to ask the gentleman whether Government experts have any information on the question whether the bill would be injurious to stock?

Mr. MANN. All the testimony we have had before us shows that the only cattle affected at all by the law as it now stands are wild range cattle, which, under the existing law, have to be unloaded after twenty-eight hours to rest during their transit to market. The process of unloading and reloading these cattle is much more injurious to them, according to the universal testimony, than it is to leave them in the cars and carry them through to their destination.

Mr. COWHERD. I know that this bill was protested against at one time by a number of societies in different parts of the country.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] that I had a similar idea in regard to the bill when it was first brought to my attention, and I then sent a copy of it to a number of humane societies throughout the country, including one in my own city which is quite prominent, and in not one of those cases was there a protest received against the bill; so I apprehend that the humane societies themselves were of the opinion that it would be much more humane to carry these wild range cattle through to their destination than to unload and reload them, permitting them in the meanwhile to "rest" in muddy pens by the side of shrieking railroad locomotives, where no rest is possible.

Mr. FLEMING. Does this amendatory bill apply only to cattle of the description named by the gentleman, or does it not also apply to the shipment of horses and stock of every sort—sheep, etc.?

Mr. MANN. That may be true to a certain extent; but the law does not in fact apply to horses, because in no case are horses shipped the distances which are contemplated by this bill.

Mr. FLEMING. Oh, yes, they are.

Mr. MANN. Our information was that they are not.

Mr. FLEMING. I know of cases where horses have been injured during transportation in this way, and suit has been brought, based on the violation of this law.

Mr. MANN. That may be possible; I do not know as to that; but such cases, if they have occurred, must have been rare. They are not in accordance at all with the practice.

Mr. FLEMING. I wish the provisions of the bill could be confined in some way to those wild range cattle.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT OACOMA, LYMAN COUNTY, S. DAK.

Mr. MANN. By authority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I desire to call up the bill (S. 911) authorizing the Federal Railroad Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the village of Oacoma, Lyman County, S. Dak.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. This bill is designed simply to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River. It has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The bill was submitted to the Secretary of War and reported upon favorably by the Chief of Engineers. It has also the support of both the gentlemen from South Dakota, and I have called it up this morning at the instance of one of those gentlemen [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. WHEELER. Is there not a general provision of law authorizing the construction of bridges over the Missouri River?

Mr. MANN. There is not.

Mr. WHEELER. I know that there is a general provision applying to the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and I supposed that it applied also to the Missouri.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Ohio River has a special statute in relation to the construction of bridges over it. That is a statute which applies to the Ohio River. There is no similar statute applying either to the Mississippi River or to the Missouri River, or, so far as I know, to any other river in the country.

Mr. WHEELER. I just wanted to find out why the gentleman reported this bill when I could not get past him last session.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman's inquiry, and it is a perfectly reasonable inquiry.

Mr. WHEELER. I wanted to say something about it if it was not all right.

Mr. MANN. There is a special statute, as I say, which applies to the Ohio River, which does not apply to any other—a statute adopted, I understand, at the request of the people along the Ohio. The bill has all the usual safeguards.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MANN, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the last two bills were passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE SAVANNAH RIVER AT SAND BAR FERRY, GEORGIA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the same committee the bill (H. R. 15445) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River at Sand Bar Ferry, below the city of Augusta, Ga., which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill and committee amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER, ETC.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 6070) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles north of the Kaw River, in Wyandotte County, State of Kansas, and Clay County, State of Missouri, and to make the same a post route, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHACKLEFORD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

RIGHT OF WAY FOR TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE LINES IN ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY (when the Committee on the Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Public Lands, I call up the bill (H. R. 14733) granting right of way for telegraph and telephone lines in the district of Alaska, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of right of way through the public lands and reservations, for whatsoever purpose established, in the district of Alaska, by any individual or association of individuals who are citizens of the United States or who have declared their intention to become such citizens, or by any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory, for telegraph or telephone purposes, to the extent required for the construction, maintenance, and care of such line, not exceeding 25 feet on each side of the center line thereof: Provided, That such permits shall be allowed within or through any reservation only upon the approval of the head of the department under whose supervision such park or reservation falls, under such conditions, limitations, and restrictions as may be deemed proper, and upon a finding by him that the same is not incompatible with the public interest: Provided further, That all permits given hereunder for telegraph and telephone purposes shall be subject to the provisions of title 65 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and amendments thereto, regulating rights of way for telegraph companies over the public domain, said laws being hereby made applicable to such telegraph and telephone lines.

SEC. 2. That within two years from the date of such permission the telegraph or telephone lines authorized shall be completed and actually used for the purpose contemplated by this act; but if the permission given to any applicant shall involve more than 200 miles of line, then 200 miles shall be completed and actually used during the first two years after the date of such permission, and 100 miles thereof in addition during each subsequent year. If such right of way be abandoned, or if no substantial work be done thereon in good faith during two consecutive years, all rights under said permission shall be at an end, and the land shall not thereafter be subject to such right of way, no further act on the part of the United States being required. If it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the parties have in any way failed to prosecute the enterprise in good faith and with due diligence he may at any time revoke such permission.

SEC. 3. That upon the filing of satisfactory evidence of the completion and use of the lines within the time allowed the Secretary of the Interior shall confirm such permission as an easement. If such easement shall at any time thereafter be abandoned, or if it is not used in good faith for the purposes authorized for three consecutive years, such easement shall be at an end, and the land shall not thereafter be in any way subject thereto, no further act on the part of the United States being required. There is hereby reserved to the Secretary of the Interior the right to revoke, amend, or suspend such permission or easement upon satisfactory showing made to him of any violation of law or the regulations made in pursuance thereof, or of any injury done or likely to be done within any reservation.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF SETTLERS UPON WISCONSIN CENTRAL RAILROAD, ETC.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I now call up from the same committee the bill (H. R. 11572) for the relief of certain settlers upon Wisconsin Central Railroad and The Dalles military road land grants, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all qualified homesteaders who, under an order issued by the Land Department bearing date October 22, 1891, and taking effect November 2, 1891, made settlement upon and improved any portion of an odd-numbered section within the conflicting limits of the grants made in aid of the construction of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railway, and the Wisconsin Central Railroad, and were thereafter prevented from completing title to the land so settled upon and improved by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Wisconsin Central Railroad Company v. Forsythe, 159 United States, page 46; and all qualified homesteaders who made settlement upon and improved any portion of an odd-numbered section within the conflicting limits of the grants made in aid of the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad and The Dalles military wagon road, under orders issued by the Land Department treating such lands as forfeited railroad lands, and were thereafter prevented from completing title to the land so settled upon and improved by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Wilcox v. Eastern Oregon Land Company, 176 United States, page 51, shall, in making final proof upon homestead entries made for other lands, be given credit for the period of their bona fide residence upon, and the amount of their improvements made on the lands for which they were unable to complete title; but no patent shall issue upon any such entry except upon proof of residence upon and improvement and cultivation of the land so entered for at least one year: Provided, That no such person shall be entitled to the benefits of this act who shall fail to make entry within two years after the passage of this act: And provided further, That this act shall not be considered as entitling any person to make another homestead entry who shall have received the benefits of the homestead law since being prevented, as aforesaid, from completing title to the lands as aforesaid settled upon and improved by him.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

On page 2, line 3, after the words "United States," insert the word "page;" on page 2, line 13, after the words "United States," insert the word "page."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] for a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill has the indorsement of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior. It simply grants to certain settlers a right to make new entries on vacant lands subject to homestead entry, and allowing them credit on the new entries for the length of time they were on their original entries, and for their improvements; but in no event shall anyone secure a patent who had not resided on them at least one year.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ESCH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WIND CAVE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3138) to set apart certain lands in the State of South Dakota as a public park, to be known as the Wind Cave National Park. This bill is identical with a House bill that has also been reported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there are hereby reserved from settlement, entry, sale, or other disposal, and set apart as a public park, all those certain tracts, pieces, or parcels of land lying and being situate in the State of South Dakota and within the boundaries particularly described as follows: Beginning at the southeast corner of section 13, township 6 south, range 5 east, Black Hills meridian, South Dakota; thence westerly to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 16, said township; thence northerly along the quarter-section lines to the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 4, said township; thence easterly to the southwest corner of section 34, township 5 south, range 5 east; thence northerly to the northwest corner of said section; thence easterly to the northeast corner of section 31, township 5 south, range 6 east; thence southerly along the section lines to the southeast corner of section 7, township 6 south, range 6 east; thence westerly to the southwest corner of said section; thence southerly to the southeast corner of section 13, township 6 south, range 5 east, the place of beginning: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect any valid rights acquired in connection with any of the lands embraced within the limits of said park.

SEC. 2. That said park shall be known as the Wind Cave National Park and shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be to prescribe such rules and regulations and establish such service as he may deem necessary for the care and management of the same.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized, in the exercise of his discretion, to rent or lease, under rules and regulations to be made by him, the cavern underlying the above-described lands, and also pieces and parcels of ground within said park for the erection of such buildings as may be required for the accommodation of visitors.

SEC. 4. That all funds arising from such rentals or leases shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a special fund to be expended in the care and improvement of said park.

SEC. 5. That in cases in which a tract covered by an unperfected bona fide claim or by a patent is included within the limits of this park, the settler or owner thereof may, if he desires to do so, relinquish the tract to the Government and secure other land, outside of the park, in accordance with the provisions of the law relating to the subject of such relinquishment of lands in forest reserves in the State of South Dakota.

SEC. 6. That all persons who shall unlawfully intrude upon said park, or who shall without permission appropriate any object therein or commit unauthorized injury or waste in any form whatever upon the lands or other public property therein, or who shall violate any of the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder, shall upon conviction be fined in a sum not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned for a period not more than twelve months, or shall suffer both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

During the reading of the bill the following occurred:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask on what Calendar this bill is?

The SPEAKER. It is upon the Union Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to the bill, but I think unanimous consent ought to be asked for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa understands that only House Calendar bills can be called up under this order.

Mr. LACEY. It is on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk reports that it is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It evidently ought not to be on the House Calendar. I have no objection to the bill coming up by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The bill is upon the Union Calendar.

Mr. LACEY. The House bill is upon the House Calendar, but by mistake the Senate bill was referred to the Union Calendar. This is a reservation of the public lands. Perhaps it involves an expenditure.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Clearly it belongs on the Union Calendar. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration. One bill is on one calendar, and one bill on the other.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered under this order, notwithstanding the fact that it is upon the Union Calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed, and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill sets apart as a national park what is known as the Wind Cave region of South Dakota. That region is substantially what the Yellowstone country would be if the geysers should die. It has been excavated by hot water in the same manner that the geyser land is now being excavated in the Yellowstone. The active forces are no longer in operation there; there is no hot water, and the conditions that formerly prevailed there have ceased; but a series of very wonderful caves remain, and the Land Department has withdrawn this tract from settlement. A portion of it, however, is already in a forest reserve, and it is desired to set it apart as a permanent reservation under this act.

The bill was drawn in the Interior Department and introduced by me at the request of that Department. I think it is a very meritorious proposition, and that this tract of land ought to be reserved to the American people.

Mr. CANNON. What is the size of it?

Mr. LACEY. In the neighborhood of 9,000 acres altogether, of which three or four sections are already in a forest reserve. The land is mainly rough, mountainous land.

Mr. CANNON. What amount of it is owned by private parties?

Mr. LACEY. A very small amount. There are a few claims, the exact amount I am not able to state; but the most of it has been reserved for some time, in order to prevent the question of lieu lands from arising. I am told that a few hundred acres would cover all that.

Mr. CANNON. Of course, the gentleman is aware of one very serious objection, leading to great abuse, which is the issuing of lieu script.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. But the amount in this instance seems to be very small.

Mr. LACEY. No one is more earnestly interested in that question than the Department of the Interior, and they have attempted to guard this by limiting the lieu to the State of South Dakota.

Mr. CANNON. I am not very clear about the irrigation legislation which we passed at the last session. From a general recollection of it I understand that the proceeds of the public lands are devoted to that fund.

Mr. LACEY. Yes, by the irrigation act of the last session of this Congress.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman whether under that act any claim could arise where we make reservations now and devote them to other uses; whether there is a claim, good in law, or any substantial equitable claim that may arise, that that fund should be reimbursed from the Treasury, for lands that are devoted to some other use?

Mr. LACEY. I should think not. That bill is limited absolutely to the receipts from public lands, and, as I understand, the gentlemen who are very much in favor of that bill are now very anxious to have the commutation clause of the homestead law repealed, so as to cut off that large source of supply of irrigation money. I do not see how any possible question of reimbursement could arise. I can see, however, where the irrigation burden may ultimately lodge upon the United States Treasury——

Mr. CANNON. I am not speaking about that.

Mr. LACEY (continuing). When the land is exhausted.

Mr. CANNON. I am not speaking about that. I do not recollect, except in a general way, the provisions of the irrigation act, but while the bill was being read the question came to my mind whether, where the United States other than for homesteads devotes lands already granted to another use, there would be either a legal or implied obligation to reimburse the irrigation fund.

Mr. LACEY. I should think not. The fund set apart for irrigation purposes is expressly limited to actual receipts from the sales of lands in certain States and Territories.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. That is in the arid and semiarid regions.

Mr. CANNON. The lands are not devoted for that purpose.

Mr. LACEY. It is the proceeds. The lands are not set apart. It is the receipts from the sales of these lands which may be taken by homestead settlers proving up, and any other receipts growing out of lands go into that fund.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman's answer is satisfactory.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). Without objection, House bill 15086, on the same subject, will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOMESTEADS IN ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time to call up House bill 12098. It is upon the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12098) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act to extend the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska," be amended by striking out the word "eighty" in the last line thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the words "three hundred and twenty."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like an explanation of the bill before unanimous consent is given.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill only does one thing. Under the Alaska right of way and homestead act which this House passed several years ago—I think it was in 1899—it was provided that a homestead should be taken in the district of Alaska of 160 acres. The Senate cut that down to 40 acres. In conference, however, a compromise was effected, and the homestead in the district of Alaska now is limited to 80 acres. In the territory adjoining Alaska on the British side a homestead or donation of 640 acres may be taken; and the House committee was of the opinion that the homestead ought to be increased in the district of Alaska to 320 acres. Of necessity a homestead there must be mainly or partly a grazing homestead.

The President, in his message, has called attention to the necessity of amending these laws for Alaska, and of the necessity, under certain circumstances, of increasing the size of the homestead. This bill, which was reported last March by the Committee on Public Lands, is strictly in line of the message, and also in harmony with the universal demand from the Alaskan country for the modification of the homestead law, so that the homesteader or settler may take land there. At present hardly any such settlers will go there. A man would not go to Alaska simply for the chance of 80 acres of land.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. You said, as I understand you, that these lands are practically or altogether grazing lands.

Mr. LACEY. Not altogether.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Substantially.

Mr. LACEY. Any man who settles in that country must of necessity depend upon grazing to a considerable extent to support life if he goes into agricultural pursuits.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does not the gentleman know that in a country devoted to grazing—where they rely upon the indigenous grasses—not 80, nor 160, nor 320 acres would be sufficient for a grazing homestead?

Mr. LACEY. Maybe 640 acres would be the proper amount, but we have to reach this question in a practical way here. Certainly 80 acres are not enough for a homestead in Alaska, and they ought to have 160 acres, but perhaps half a section is about all that could be agreed upon, and all that will probably be allowed, and that will meet the existing conditions.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is that satisfactory to the people?

Mr. LACEY. I understand it will be.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman's provision make any distinction between the arable land and the grazing land?

Mr. LACEY. None whatever. It simply changes the homestead law from 80 acres to 320 acres.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Now, there are some lands in Alaska that can be farmed generally aside from grazing. I see some mention in the President's message of the distinction between those lands. What condition is there imposed as to those lands in distinction from the grazing land?

Mr. LACEY. I say that any man who will go to Alaska for the purpose of making settlement ought to have half a section of land.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If it is good farming land.

Mr. LACEY. If it is good farming land; if it is the best sort of land. And I undertake to say that 320 acres of land would be as small a temptation as any man ought to have to induce him to go to that country for actual settlement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman think the President's suggestion as to other lands would not obtain in Alaska?

Mr. LACEY. That involves another proposition as to the provisions of the homestead law in the arid and semiarid regions, where homesteaders of necessity must rely practically altogether on grazing.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I wanted to know if the gentleman thought it was applicable to Alaska and he would consider that it would be if there were farming lands in Alaska suitable for general farming. Are there such lands?

Mr. LACEY. There are such lands.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. To what extent, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. LACEY. The extent is unknown. This is experimental, and in order to carry out that experiment a sufficient tract of land ought to be given to each homesteader to justify him in making the attempt.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

GRANTS OF LAND TO THE TERRITORY AND STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the committee, I now call up House bill 11845, relating to grants of land to the Territory and State of Washington for school purposes.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that bill S. 4204 be substituted for this bill. It has been reported by the Committee on the Public Lands and is on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand this bill ought to be on the Union Calendar, and ought to be submitted to the House by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Senate bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I so understand, and the House bill ought to be on the Union Calendar.

Mr. LACEY. This, Mr. Speaker, is the same question we had up before. One bill is on one Calendar and the other bill is on the other. I am inclined to think that the House bill ought to be on the Union Calendar, for it does involve indirectly an appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered, notwithstanding the fact that it is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Pending that request, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the explanation of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the bill simply confirms the title of the State of Washington to certain lands. It seems that in 1853 and in 1859 certain grants were made to the Territory of Washington, with the provision that the Territory should provide a method for the selection of these lands, and in case settlers had made settlement on the lands granted before the lands were surveyed, then the State or Territory should make a new selection.

The legislature of the Territory provided that the county commissioners should make these selections, and this was done in many cases. Then the act of 1889, that admitted the State into the Union, made similar grants of land in sections 16 and 36, with provisions also that where settlement had been made prior to selection new selections might be made. New selections have been made by the State under these acts, but the question as to the effect of the grant to the State and the Territory has been raised at different times by different parties, although the Secretary of the Interior and the Land Department have uniformly held in favor of the State. The matter has been submitted to the supreme court of the State and it has held in favor of the State. These have been the uniform rulings of the Secretary of the Interior, and he recommends the passage of the bill simply as a legislative construction of these grants.

The Senate in their report made the following statement:

A similar holding has been made by the supreme court of the State of Washington, but as the matter has been questioned in several instances, as above stated, it is desirable that a legislative construction of the acts referred to should be had, and this is the only purpose of this bill.

That is all the bill; simply a confirmation of the title and grants to the State.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand the gentleman from Washington that this is not a bill to grant new lands, but to confirm the title to lands already granted the State of Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, House bill 11845 will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

SELECTIONS OF SCHOOL LAND IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. LACEY. I call up the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 196) empowering the State of Minnesota to file its selections for indemnity school lands upon public lands in Minnesota, otherwise undisposed of in townships, immediately upon the survey thereof in the field and prior to the approval and filing of the plat and survey thereof.

The joint resolution, as proposed by the committee to be amended by a substitute, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Minnesota is hereby empowered and authorized to make selections of indemnity school lands in lieu of lands in sections 16 and 36, granted to said State for school purposes and lost by reason of prior disposition of same by the United States, or other causes, of any public lands in said State of which the survey thereof has been made in the field and which have not been otherwise disposed of, and to which no valid settlement right has attached; and any selections made prior to the approval and filing of the plat of survey shall be, and are hereby, declared as valid and binding upon the United States as though the plat of survey of any such township had been approved and filed as aforesaid: Provided, That within thirty days from the date of filing of such selections the State shall cause notice to be published in some newspaper of general circulation, to be designated by the proper district land officers within the vicinity of the lands selected, setting forth that the State has applied for the lands designated, and that the same are reserved thereby from any adverse appropriation, by settlement or otherwise, which publication shall be continued for thirty days from the first publication: And provided further, That such indemnity school-land selections shall be subject to any modification or alteration of description and area rendered necessary by subsequent correction of the survey of any township wherein the lands so selected are situated.

Mr. LACEY. This joint resolution is upon the House Calendar; but there is some question in this case, as in the last, whether it should not have gone upon the Union Calendar. I ask unanimous consent, however, that it be considered at this time.

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. EDDY] to explain this resolution.

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Speaker, at the time of the cession of the Indian reservations in Minnesota, under the law of 1889, that State claimed sections numbered 16 and 36. The question went to the Supreme Court of the United States, which decided that the State was not entitled to those lands, but also decided at the same time, by inference, that it was entitled to select indemnity lands in lieu of the lands embraced in the reservations.

This resolution simply provides that when a survey has been made the State may, prior to the filing and approval of the plat by the Secretary of the Interior, make these selections, putting them on the same footing as selections by private settlers.

I will add that since the introduction of the bill most of the lands to which the State was entitled have been selected, so that the present measure covers only 2,000 acres. I may state also that the measure has received the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The question being taken, the amendment by way of substitute as reported by the committee was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was then ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDDY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WEIGHT OF SILVER COINS.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures be returned to, in order that I may call up the bill (H. R. 12705) to amend section 3536, Revised Statutes.

Mr. BELL. We should like to hear that bill read in full before unanimous consent is granted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3536 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, repealed and the following enacted in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 3536. In adjusting the weight of the silver coins the following deviation shall not be exceeded in any single piece: In the dollar, the half and quarter dollar, and the dime, 1½ grains."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD]?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I will state to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] that this bill is the unanimous report of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, which includes, as the gentleman knows, his colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH].

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SOUTHARD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LARCENY OF HORSES, ETC., IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. CURTIS (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 13404) fixing the punishment for the larceny of horses, cattle, and other live stock in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person, whether an Indian or otherwise, who shall hereafter be convicted in the Indian Territory of stealing any horse, mare, gelding, filly, foal, mule, ass, or jenny, or of stealing, or marking, killing, or wounding with intent to steal, any kind of cattle, pigs, hogs, sheep, or goats, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than fifteen years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That all such acts and parts of acts shall remain in force for the punishment of all persons who have heretofore been guilty in the Indian Territory of the offense or offenses herein mentioned: And provided further, That this act shall not affect or apply to any prosecution now pending or the prosecution of any offense already committed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced at the request of the Department of Justice. I should like to have read the letter of the Attorney-General giving the reasons for the passage of the measure.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., March 28, 1902.

SIR: I desire to call to your attention, with a view of obtaining legislation in the matter, the question of the penalty for the larceny of horses and cattle in the Indian Territory. A copy of certain laws which have heretofore been in effect, and which are now in effect in the Indian Territory concerning this offense, is inclosed, as well as a copy of a letter of this Department to Senator HOAR.

By referring to the copy of the laws herewith you will observe that under the act of February 15, 1888, no minimum was fixed for horse theft, and the maximum penalty was imprisonment of not more than fifteen years or a fine of not more than $1,000, or both fine and imprisonment; that under the act of May 2, 1890, certain Arkansas statutes were made applicable to the Indian Territory, with a provision that in all cases where the laws of the United States and the criminal laws of Arkansas have provided for the punishment of the same offenses the laws of the United States shall govern as to such offenses; that under the act of March 1, 1895, the same law was reenacted, with a provision excepting therefrom the crime of larceny, the punishment for which shall be that prescribed by the laws of Arkansas; that under section 1628 of the Criminal Code of Arkansas larceny of cattle is punishable by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years; and that under section 1629 the crime of horse theft is punishable by imprisonment for not less than five nor more than fifteen years.

It is evident from very numerous letters and reports from the United States attorneys and judges that the minimum penalty of five years in the penitentiary is excessive in many cases of horse stealing.

I agree with the district attorneys and judges in their conclusions in this matter, and think that there should be remedial legislation. It appears to me that the reenactment of the portion of the act of February 15, 1888, relating to larceny of horses, with an additional and similar section governing the larceny of cattle, would be a solution of the question.

Respectfully,

P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
House of Representatives.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The Clerk proceeded with the call.

Mr. DAVIDSON (when the Committee on Railways and Canals was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Railways and Canals be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Railways and Canals be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk proceeded with the call.

ANNUAL ASSESSMENT ON OIL-MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. EDDY (when the Committee on Mines and Mining was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Mines and Mining, I call up the bill (H. R. 15198) defining what shall constitute and providing for assessments on oil-mining claims, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where oil lands are located under the provisions of Title XXXII, chapter 6, Revised Statutes of the United States, as placer mining claims, the annual assessment labor upon such claims may be done upon any one of a group of claims lying contiguous and owned by the same person or corporation, not exceeding five claims in all: Provided, That said labor will benefit or tend to the development of such contiguous claims.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 9 strike out the words "benefit or," and after the word "development" insert "or to determine the oil-bearing character."

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that assessment labor upon oil-mining claims may be done to any one of a group of claims, not exceeding five in all, provided that the claims lie contiguous to one another. These oil-mining claims are now located under the provisions of the placer-mining act, under an act of Congress so providing. Now, it has been found that in prospecting for oil upon these lands it can not be determined from an inspection of the surface whether oil will be located in driving the wells or not, so that very often it turns out that a number of experimental wells are driven before the oil-bearing character of the land is determined. It is thought by those who are engaged in this business and by the committee itself, which has had the subject under investigation, that it is a great deal better that the assessment work of $100 per annum upon each claim should be done upon one of a group of claims, thereby allowing $500 worth of work to be done upon one well, than it is to distribute the work in five different wells, and thereby do $100 worth of work upon each of these claims. It is thought that it will be in the interests of the oil-mining industry itself. The bill is unanimously reported from the committee, is desired by the people in the Rocky Mountain mining States who are engaged in this business, and in its present form is, I understand, not objectionable to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does this apply to the first work, the location work, as it is known?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It has nothing to do with the question of location or location work. The law provides that on each of these claims $100 worth of work shall be done every year in order to keep the location good.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I mean the first work. Does it require to be location work—that is, the sinking of a well 10 feet, I believe is the law?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no provision of the Federal law which requires any amount of work to be done before making a location upon any mining claim, so far as I understand. There are in some of the States local laws which provide that a certain amount of work shall be done.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How does this affect the local laws?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Those laws are subsidiary to the Federal laws. In my own State there is no such provision that I know of.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Many of the States have local laws which require what they call location "work" to be done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; many of the States have such laws. This bill would not interfere with those laws. It simply has reference to the assessment labor required to be done under the Federal law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There would have to be $100 worth of work done on each claim, and the claim, as I understand it, is 20 acres.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Each claim is 20 acres——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (interrupting). It amounts to that——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. When located by one individual.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There may be 160 acres located by an association of not less than eight persons.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. One individual can locate only 20 acres. Does your bill permit five individuals to put down one well upon five claims and hold those claims?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill allows one well to be put down on a claim, and the assessment labor may be done for the entire group, not exceeding five claims, upon the one well.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Notwithstanding the man may not form a company?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, no; the bill itself says a group of claims lying contiguous and owned by the same person or corporation. They must all be owned by the same person or corporation, of course.

Mr. LACEY. Suppose five separate associations should have made locations under the placer-mining law. Now, under this proposition could the work on all five of those groups be done upon one group?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. LACEY. In other words, this only provides for not exceeding $500 worth of work?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not exceeding $500 worth of work. It provides that the claims must be contiguous and owned by the same person or corporation.

Mr. BURKETT. This is for oil, as I understand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. Would not this have a tendency to make fewer holes in the ground?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; and I think that is a very good tendency, because as it is now we are distributing the experimental work among a number of different wells, when it ought to be concentrated upon one, or a less number than it is now.

Mr. BURKETT. There is nothing in this bill to compel any person to designate what particular 20 acres this work is done for. It is done upon one, but it is done for five, and there is nothing here to say that they must designate what the other four are. Now, does not that leave an opening for some confusion? Supposing a claim is let go, that it never has been really followed up, and somebody goes at it and says, "I will take up that claim," and then somebody else comes in and says, "I did the work for that on this other claim."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I think the local laws in all the mining States provide that a certificate of the labor must be recorded. Now, when the individual or the corporation does the assessment work upon any one particular claim for the benefit of the others, he must designate those claims in his certificate, and that certificate must be made of record, so that everybody is advised by an inspection of the public record that the work has been done for the benefit of these particular five claims which are named in the certificate.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SUTHERLAND, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The call of committees was resumed.

GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD.

Mr. GROW (when the Committee on Education was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 4419) to incorporate the general education board.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That William H. Baldwin, jr., Jabez L. M. Curry, Frederick T. Gates, Daniel C. Gilman, Morris K. Jesup, Robert C. Ogden, Walter H. Page, George Foster Peabody, and Albert Shaw, and their successors, be, and they hereby are, constituted a body corporate of the District of Columbia; that the name of such body corporate shall be General Education Board, and that by such name the said persons and their successors shall have perpetual succession.

SEC. 2. That the object of the said corporation shall be the promotion of education within the United States of America, without distinction of race, sex, or creed.

SEC. 3. That for the promotion of such object the said corporation shall have power to build, improve, enlarge, or equip, or to aid others to build, improve, enlarge, or equip, buildings for elementary or primary schools, industrial schools, technical schools, normal schools, training schools for teachers, or schools of any grade, or for higher institutions of learning, or, in connection therewith, libraries, workshops, gardens, kitchens, or other educational accessories; to establish, maintain, or endow, or aid others to establish, maintain, or endow, elementary or primary schools, industrial schools, technical schools, normal schools, training schools for teachers, or schools of any grade, or higher institutions of learning; to employ or aid others to employ teachers and lecturers; to aid, cooperate with, or endow associations or other corporations engaged in educational work within the United States of America, or to donate to any such association or corporation any property or moneys which shall at any time be held by the said corporation hereby constituted; to collect educational statistics and information, and to publish and distribute documents and reports containing the same, and in general to do and perform all things necessary or convenient for the promotion of the object of the corporation.

SEC. 4. That the said corporation shall further have power to have and use a common seal and to alter and change the same at its pleasure; to sue or be sued in any court of the United States or other court of competent jurisdiction; to make by-laws for the admission or exclusion of its members, for the election of its trustees, officers, and agents, and otherwise; for the casting of votes by its members or trustees by proxy; for the purchase, management, sale, or transfer of its property; the investment and control of its funds and the general transaction of its business; to take or receive, whether by gift, grant, devise, bequest, or purchase, any real or personal estate, or to hold, grant, convey, hire, or lease the same for the purposes of its incorporation; to accept and administer any trust of money or of real or personal estate for any educational purpose within the object of the corporation as aforesaid; to prescribe by by-laws or otherwise the terms and conditions upon which money, real estate, or personal estate shall be acquired or received by the said corporation, and for the grant, transfer, assignment, or donation of any or all property of the said corporation, real or personal, to any society or corporation for any of the said purposes for which the said corporation is hereby incorporated, and otherwise generally for the management of the property and the transaction of the business of the corporation.

SEC. 5. That the members of the corporation shall be not less than nine in number and not more than seventeen, as may be prescribed by the by-laws of the corporation: Provided, however, That if and when the number of members shall be less than nine the members remaining shall have power to add and shall add to their number until the number shall be not less than nine: And provided, That no act of the corporation shall be void because at the time such act shall be done the number of the members of the corporation shall be less than nine; that all the members of the corporation shall be its trustees; that no member of the said association shall, by reason of such membership or his trusteeship, be personally liable for any of its debts or obligations; that each member of the corporation shall hold his membership for a term of three years and until his successor shall be chosen: Provided, however, That the members shall be at all times divided into three classes numerically, as nearly as may be, and that the original members shall, at their first meeting, or as soon thereafter as shall be convenient, be divided into three classes, the members of the first class to hold their membership and office until the expiration of one year from the 1st day of January next after the enactment of this law, the members of the second class until the expiration of two years thereafter, and the members of the third class until the expiration of three years thereafter, and that in every case the member shall hold office after the expiration of his term until his successor shall be chosen: And provided further, That in case any member shall, by death, resignation, incapacity to act, or otherwise, cease to be a member during his term, his successor shall be chosen to serve for the remainder of such term and until his successor shall be chosen; and that the principal office of the said corporation shall be in the city of Washington, D. C.: Provided, That meetings may be held elsewhere within the United States as may be determined by the members or provided for by the by-laws.

SEC. 6. That all real property of the corporation within the District of Columbia which shall be used by the corporation for the education or other purposes of the corporation as aforesaid, other than the purpose of producing income, and all personal property and funds of the corporation held, used, or invested for educational purpose as aforesaid, or to produce income to be used for such purposes, shall be exempt from taxation: Provided, however, That this exemption shall not apply to any property of the corporation which shall not be used for, or the income of which shall not be applied to, the educational purposes of the corporation: And provided further, That the corporation shall annually file with the Secretary of the Interior of the United States a report in writing, stating in detail the property, real and personal, held by the corporation, and the expenditure or other use or disposition of the same or the income thereof during the preceding year.

SEC. 7. That this charter shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or appeal at the pleasure of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. GROW. This is a Senate bill, passed unanimously by that body, to provide for a corporation in the District of Columbia that may receive donations or gifts for educational purposes which any citizen or anyone else desires to make. That is its sole object—to have a corporation in the District of Columbia with the power to receive money or gifts of any kind from liberally disposed people, to be used for educational purposes in any State.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROW, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EMPLOYMENT OF ENLISTED MEN IN COMPETITION WITH LOCAL CIVILIANS.

Mr. BARTHOLDT (when the Committee on Labor was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Labor, I call up for consideration House joint resolution No. 9.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 9) in reference to the employment of enlisted men in competition with local civilians.

Resolved, etc., That hereafter no enlisted man in the service of the United States, the Army and Navy, respectively, whether a noncommissioned officer, musician, or private, shall be detailed, ordered, or permitted to leave his post to engage in any pursuit, business, or performance in civil life for emolument, hire, or otherwise, when the same shall interfere with the customary employment and regular engagement of local civilians in their respective arts, trades, or professions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like the gentleman from Missouri to explain the object of this bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read. It contains as brief an explanation as I could make.

The report (by Mr. BARTHOLDT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Labor, to whom was referred the resolution (H. J. Res. 9) in reference to the employment of enlisted men in competition with local civilians, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said resolution do pass without amendment:

The legislation herein proposed has for its object the protection of civilian musicians against the competition of enlisted men. Its enactment is demanded by every consideration of justice and fairness in behalf of those citizens and taxpayers who are depending upon their profession as musicians for the support of themselves and families. Under existing conditions the members of Army and Navy bands are allowed to freely compete with civilian musicians and with private bands in the matter of securing engagements and contracts to furnish music for all occasions. They are under the pay of the Government; their subsistence is provided for by the Government; their uniforms and instruments and all the necessary sheet music and other paraphernalia are paid for out of the National Treasury, all of which affords them a considerable advantage, and easily enables them to underbid the citizen musicians on all occasions where music is to be furnished under contract. The chances of the latter for employment and to earn the means for their support are thereby correspondingly reduced.

"Localities in which no military bands are located are, of course, not affected either by this competition or the proposed remedy, but the extent of that competition, wherever it exists, may be measured by the fact that engagements to furnish music are invariably made under contract, and just as invariably awarded to the lowest bidder, which, under the unequal conditions above described, is usually the military band. But even if the figures of the civilian band were not higher, experience teaches that preference is usually being given to the military band because it is looked upon as a special attraction. This is due to a strong prejudice on the part of many people in favor of military organizations, and the present system nurtures this prejudice, thus indirectly promoting what both parties abhor, the spirit of militarism.

"Simple justice demands that a citizen musician, as a citizen, is entitled to the same consideration as men of any other trade or vocation. The Government does not allow soldiers to compete with citizens as bakers, bricklayers, masons, blacksmiths, doctors, or lawyers, and it does not dream of ordering out the artisans of any particular craft in case of labor troubles to take the place of ordinary workmen, and the same measure of protection against Government competition should be extended to civilian musicians."

This resolution, if passed, will in no wise interfere with regimental bands furnishing music at official occasions or social functions at the Executive Mansion or other places where their services may be required by the President or other officials of the Government, nor will the inhibition extend to any free concerts given by Army and Navy bands. The committee is, on the contrary, of opinion that these governmental bands should be more frequently utilized for such purposes in order to give the people an equivalent for the pay they are receiving, which pay should be sufficiently increased to render unnecessary the competition with civilians which this resolution is intended to prohibit and which remuneration would attract the best musical talent of the country.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the general purpose of this bill, and I think perhaps it is well enough to pass it; but I call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to the fact that there are perhaps now some contracts, one or more, already in existence, which have for a very long time been recognized and allowed by the War Department or the Navy Department, or both, and that there ought to be some provision that this law shall not apply to existing contracts.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to accept such an amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can dictate the words of the amendment very easily if the Clerk will send me the resolution. [After a pause.] I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall in any way affect or render unlawful any contracts now existing and which are to be completed within twelve months from this date."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, before a vote is taken on the bill, I desire recognition. The gentleman from Missouri has yielded the floor.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am perfectly willing to yield the floor to the gentleman from Alabama—for how much time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to be recognized in my own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a small bill, probably not of very much importance; but it is that class of legislation that in recent years has grown very rapidly in the Congress of the United States and that I think is clearly vicious. It is legislation for one man against the other. It is Congress taking up one side and legislating the other side out of business. Now, the citizens of the United States have some rights. When they propose to hire a band they ought to have the privilege of hiring whatever band they want. There is no reason why we should say that one set of musicians should be prohibited from giving their services to a citizen when the citizen wants to pay for them, and that he must buy his music from another set of men. Now, that is all there is in this bill.

We want in the Army and in the Navy just as good musicians as we can get. They are not paid very high wages; they have to give the great bulk of their time to the Government. Now, if these men at a time when they are at leisure can receive some additional compensation from private individuals it may be some inducement for the best men to go into the Army and Navy bands; and there certainly can be no good reason why they should be prohibited from hiring their services to other people, except that we want to say there is one set of citizens that is better than another set of citizens, and we propose to discriminate against anybody who goes into the United States Army.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Would my friend from Alabama be just as willing to detail a carpenter, a mason, or a shoemaker or tailor who happened to be an enlisted man, and detail him to do work for a private citizen in the same way these musicians are doing the work of others?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, I am not in favor of the Government detailing men to do work for anybody, but after a man has performed his duties and is willing to sell his idle time, whether he be a musician, a carpenter, a tailor, or anybody else, if he wants to sell his idle time to some private citizen I think he should have the right to do so in any way that he pleases.

Mr. WACHTER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Does not the gentleman consider it unfair competition by reason of the fact that the Government musician has regular pay all the time, and in that way it is unfair competition from the fact that he can work cheaper, because he has a permanent salary from the Government, while a private citizen gets nothing, but has to rely entirely upon his ability to secure employment in the community where he resides.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My understanding of this matter is that these Government bands are hired out to private citizens because the private citizens want them. As a matter of fact they are employed because the persons who employ them favor them. They think they are better bands than the private bands, and they pay them more money than they pay to private bands.

But it does not make any difference whether they are paid more or whether they are paid less, for the time belongs to the man after he has rendered his service to the Government, and if the individual citizen wants to employ him he has a right to do it. I do not believe in this business of legislating one company out of business to make room for another. I do not believe in this legislation that legislates one man out of his right to work in order to give the privilege of working to another man. This is a free country, and every man should have the right to work for whom he pleases without the law preventing him from doing so.

Mr. WACHTER. Let me ask the gentleman from Alabama. When a man enlists, from the date of his enlistment to the date of the expiration of it, is he not always in the service of the Government?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; not when he is off duty.

Mr. WACHTER. Does the gentleman know that the Marine Band never makes a contract unless it places a clause in the contract which relieves them from the contract if they are interfered with by the Government engagements?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, certainly.

Mr. WACHTER. That shows that they are always in the service of the Government, and so consider themselves, and they will not make an engagement unless that clause is put in.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I may work for the gentleman for eight hours a day, but I have a right to my time after the expiration of those eight hours. There is some leisure that I have, and if I want to hire out during that leisure to a third party, I have a perfect right to do so.

Mr. WACHTER. Oh, well, that is in private life; in the Army and in the Navy you are a soldier or a sailor all the time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And so in private life I am subject to your call until you give me my vacation.

Mr. WACHTER. There are limited hours in private life, which is not the fact in the Government service.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, we know perfectly well that these men have idle time; if they had not there would be no demand for this bill. It is simply this, and the gentleman knows it: It is simply that a lot of men want these particular musicians legislated out of the way so they can get the money that the people are paying to them. In other words, we are legislating one set of men out of business to give the money to another set of men. It is not democratic, it is not republican, it is not in keeping with the spirit of our Government. This is not the beginning of this legislation, it is only a small portion of it, and it is that line of legislation that is driving directly to socialism, and it is socialism that stands behind it to-day.

Mr. GROSVENOR. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama if he does not think this is somewhat supplemental, just barely supplemental in part, to legislating one industry out of existence for the benefit of another?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. I suppose the gentleman refers to the oleomargarine bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Which the gentleman from Alabama voted for.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; I did not. I voted against reporting the resolution and the gentleman from Ohio voted to report it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I voted against the bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was brought to my notice I was inclined to take the same view of it as the gentleman from Alabama. I thought it might possibly be looked upon as class legislation. But since I have fully understood the conditions which exist in the large cities of our country I have come to the conclusion that legislation of this kind is absolutely necessary for the protection of the American citizen, and in my judgment this is not un-American legislation, but legislation in the interest and for the protection of the American citizen who honestly strives to make a living by honest labor, as every civilian musician in this country does.

In St. Louis, for instance, before the military band came there, there existed five or six excellent orchestras, composed of civilians, who furnished the music on all occasions. As soon as the Government band was located at Jefferson Barracks they bid for all the contracts for music for public and private occasions, and because of the fact that the Government furnishes the instruments, pays for the sheet music, feeds and pays those men, and shelters them, the regimental band has always been enabled to underbid the civilian band and the civilian musician, and the result is that five different civilian bands have been put out of business.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if we ought not to make this apply to other departments of the public service?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, this has nothing to do with letter-carrier bands, if that is what my friend refers to, because these bands would not undertake to furnish private music under private contracts. It is only regimental bands of the country that are interfering with the music of the civilian bands.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Missouri a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What is the pay of the musicians in the service of the Government as compared with the union scale for musicians outside of the Government service?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In answer to that question let me say that the Marine Band in Washington occupies an exceptional position, for the reason that Congress has provided by special law that the pay of the members of that band shall be from $50 to $60 a month. I have the statements of musicians all over the country—civilian musicians—that they are ready, all of them, to come to Washington and become members of the Marine Band at that rate of wages, because under present conditions they are unable to make as much in private life.

Mr. MANN. The head of the Marine Corps told me less than a year ago that it was very difficult to obtain first-class men for the Marine Band. Now, what are the wages at the Jefferson Barracks, for instance, as compared with the wages of ordinary musicians?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I think they receive the pay of enlisted men, with something additional in the form of rations.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman know, or believe, that it would not be possible for the Government to secure good musicians for the Army and Navy bands at the wages now paid unless the men were permitted to earn money outside?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am willing to admit that. I would go farther, and would be in favor of increasing the pay of the members of the regimental bands.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman ask to have that done in connection with this measure, instead of absolutely cutting off the bands of the Army and Navy from the privilege of accepting this outside employment after they have enlisted under the supposition, and with the hope, that they would be entitled to earn money outside?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That will of necessity follow. But that question has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. MANN. Such a measure might cause a large increase in the appropriation.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It would not amount to very much to allow every musician in our regimental bands $50 or $60 a month. The total increase would be very small.

I wish to say, in addition, that the principle of this bill has been recognized by several Secretaries of War and several Secretaries of the Navy, who have issued orders forbidding the members of regimental bands to compete for private employment. But these orders have been subject to many exceptions. All that has been necessary when anyone wished to obtain military music has been merely to write a letter to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy and an exception would be granted; so that finally the rule has become obsolete. For this reason the National Association of Musicians has come to Congress asking for this legislation. The bill is also supported by the American Federation of Labor, which, at its last national convention, indorsed the provisions of the measure.

Mr. GRAFF. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the members of these bands are now entirely without restraint so far as being permitted to be employed for outside service at any time?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. So far as I know they are not restrained to furnish music for anybody at times when they are not needed by the Government.

Mr. GRAFF. And private individuals, desiring to employ such a band, go to the head of the band and make arrangements, just as if it were a private band?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Just the same; and sometimes the band is divided up into two or three sections, so that when the Government needs the services of the Marine Band, or any other Government band, only one-third, possibly, of the band are sent out for public service, while the other two-thirds are employed by private individuals, and are receiving pay in that way.

Mr. GRAFF. Is this private employment extensive? Do the members of these Government bands do a great deal of private work?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. They furnish almost all of the military music, because most persons prefer these organizations on account of the uniforms. The gentleman knows the weakness of the people for uniforms.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman allow me a remark?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Allow me to say that gentlemen who do not live in the vicinity of military posts can hardly appreciate the importance of the competition of the military musicians with those who pursue this vocation in private life. The rate charged for services of this sort has been so repeatedly and so severely cut by military bands that in the city of San Antonio, where I reside, they have found it practically impossible to compete, and where in the absence of this competition from these musicians who are supported by the Government we would have most excellent bands of our own, it has been difficult to maintain them because of the uncertainty of making a livelihood out of it.

These musicians have their association in the city of San Antonio, and have had for years, and have been appealing to the department commanders and to myself and other Representatives in Congress, to the Secretary of War, to prevent this competition. Under existing conditions it seems impossible to do it. Some Secretaries of War have issued, as the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] has said, orders forbidding this competition. Others may not see it in that light and will not do so, and I believe that legislation of this kind is necessary to protect musicians in private life who depend upon their art for their living from this competition, and I sincerely hope that the resolution will pass.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in making the usual annual appropriation for the salaries of the Marine Corps Band at Washington, I do know that it has always been anticipated that the members of the band would have an opportunity individually of obtaining employment outside. If this resolution passes, in my judgment, it will be necessary to increase the appropriation, so that this band may be properly remunerated.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman state what the appropriations are per capita for the band at the present time?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will answer the gentleman. It is between $50 and $60 a month. It was stated before the Committee on Labor, by the president of the American Musicians' Union, that if there ever was any lack of men in the Marine Corps they would send any time in the year 500 men here who would take the job at that rate.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. If that is not the amount, the Government can give it better than to allow this unlawful competition.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I yield now to the chairman of the committee [Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey].

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the objections that are being suggested to this bill by the members around me would be forcible if they were applicable. The bands of the United States, to begin with, are composed of enlisted men. They have no contract more favorable than other enlisted men. The practice of allowing them to go outside and play here and there, to satisfy social fads and to make extra money, is one that has grown up independent of law, independent of anything in the contemplation of the law, and is an anomaly upon everything else in the military system, whether of this or any other country. There is no more reason for it and no more justification for it than there would be for the soldiers from Fort Myer, at every hour not required for military duty, to come into the city of Washington and run as messenger boys or do any other work they can find to do.

Now, gentlemen are talking about the additional expense of these bands to the country if they are not allowed to play outside. They have gone so far as to allege that they are enlisted with the idea that they will have an opportunity to make money in private employment to eke out their salaries, to the relief of the Government. Where does that lead you? It absolutely puts the Government of the United States in positive competition with private employment for the purpose of lessening its salary roll. That is where the gentlemen have put the Government. Is that an alluring idea for the House to contemplate? Further, this thing is wrong in practice. These, as I have said, are enlisted men.

My friend on the right suggested that people want to hear the Government bands. Yes, they do advertise the great Marine Band of the United States, and it is a fact that when they go to a town the people fancy that in having the United States band they have something very superior, perhaps, and all that; but we have in the city of Camden, for instance, the great Jennings Band. Every important town has its band, and under the existing practice of the War Department, under the theories advocated by gentlemen here, these bands are wholly at the mercy of the mere accident of whether the United States shall to-morrow or next month locate a military band there or not.

If the Government does, then the private band goes out of employment, and the members may leave their homes and go to New York, Pittsburg, or elsewhere to seek employment in new locations.

I know of nothing much more abhorrent in basic principle than for the United States, by accident, to be transferring itinerant military bands around the country, which, for the time being, deprive local musicians of their employment and absolutely drive them from their homes.

My friend from Michigan suggests the letter carriers might organize bands. There is no possible comparison between the two. The letter carrier lives in the city where he is such carrier. There is his home. There he maintains his family. There are his interests. There he is identified, as any other citizen is identified, and if in the evening or at times when he is off duty he enters into such employment it is a thing identified with the town. It is entirely different from a band of enlisted men, coming from all quarters of the country, permanently lodged nowhere, and being itinerantly put somewhere in barracks. The question has been asked if these enlisted men can be gotten whenever they are wanted. The circumstances govern the case largely. Music, in eight-tenths of all the cases, is required in the evening. In the evening United States forces, other than guards, etc., are not upon duty. The military band is always at leisure, in that sense, in the hours when music is most in demand.

The committee may do what they please with this bill, but I want to assert again that as a matter of principle the present practice is wrong, that it is an anomaly and an excrescence upon everything else connected with the military service of the Government, and that there is no more reason for it, as I have said, than that the soldiers stationed around Washington should, when off duty, come in here and seek employment as messenger boys or laborers. There is no difference in principle between the musicians around Washington taking private employment and the soldiers at Fort Myer coming over here on Monday and taking the work of the men who are digging for culverts in the city of Washington.

This bill ought to pass because of the principle involved. It ought to pass because of the very widespread demand for it that does not reach this House, as do the influences which surround it here in consequence of the location of the Marine Band in Washington. It ought to be passed for the good of the service of the United States. And if it be true, as has been said here to-day by members in the presence of the world, that $50 and $60 a month, as compared with the $13 and $16 of the enlisted man, is insufficient pay for the musicians employed in a military band, and that the Government of the United States is employing musicians for less than they are worth, less than they acknowledge them to be worth, with the idea that poor old Uncle Sam will be relieved by putting his employees in off hours in competition with civilians—if that is true, and the world has heard it stated here to-day, then in the name of Heaven let it not be true to-morrow after this House has acted upon this measure.

Mr. WACHTER. Mr. Chairman, this is a very live question in the city of Baltimore. We have there Fort McHenry, which, as every member of this House knows, is the historic spot where the "Star Spangled Banner" was written. Fort McHenry so long as I can remember has always been a military post with a band. I remember when I was quite a boy the location of the Second Artillery Band there. I remember seeing it march through the streets of Baltimore in every St. Patrick's Day parade. As I have said, Fort McHenry has had a band ever since I can remember up to and including 1899, when the three batteries of the Sixth Artillery then stationed there were ordered to the Philippines and took their band with them. Since that time the war has been on and public attention to the military band at Fort McHenry has been on the wane; but recently the question has been revived with regard to having another military band stationed there. There are located there to-day five companies of Coast Artillery, sufficient to warrant a band being placed there.

And yet the entire community of Baltimore, I might say, is arrayed against the location of a military band there. And when you gentlemen take into consideration the fact that when that band was located there, by reason of the beautiful location of the fort on the water front, the beautiful grounds contained therein, and the evening concerts, together with the historical relation it bears to the "Star Spangled Banner," you can very readily understand it is something that the people want. Yet in the face of that, rather than to have that band in competition with the private bands of the city, I have been importuned by committee after committee not to ask that it be declared a military post and not to ask the War Department to place a band there. We do not want a military band there if that band is going to take the bread and butter out of the mouths of our private musicians. We do not want soldiers of the United States Army placed in competition with the breadwinners in the musical world of Baltimore. I hope, therefore, that this bill will prevail. If it passes, I serve notice on the House that I shall ask that a military band be again placed in that fort which marks the historic location of the birth of the "Star Spangled Banner," and I feel, on these grounds, that the War Department will accede to my request.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri in charge of the bill whether this is to apply to anything except musicians?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The terms of the bill are general and possibly it does apply to others.

Mr. MANN. Under the terms of this bill an army ambulance is prohibited from picking up a wounded or distressed person on the street, and in the case of a flood a general of the Army or an enlisted man is prohibited from being ordered to do any work in connection with that. It is an absolute prohibition against any enlisted man being ordered to do any work which a civilian could do.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Done in competition.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Well, the Committee on Labor, after a very thorough consideration of this question, have arrived at this conclusion. No sane man would hold that if an enlisted man should perform some of the humanitarian services such as mentioned by my friend from Illinois it would be a violation of this law if placed on the statute books.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman makes a very violent presumption when he supposes that all of these cases will be presented to sane men in the Government, or the gentleman has not had experience in the red tape of the departments about sanity or insanity in the service of the Government in reference to little matters that are contained in the laws. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman's experience is more extended than mine, I have no doubt.

Mr. MANN. Here is a positive prohibition from doing anything that a civilian can do.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. It is when done in competition.

Mr. MANN. It does not say anything about "competition." It is—not permitted to leave his post to engage in any pursuit, business, or performance in civil life for emolument or hire or otherwise when the same shall interfere with the customary employment and regular engagement of local civilians in their respective arts, trades, or professions.

The words "arts, trades, or professions" cover everything. I do not suppose it is the intention of the gentleman to ask the Secretary of War or the chief of the Army to violate the law in order to accomplish something. This bill would prevent a sergeant, a corporal, or an enlisted man writing anything for pay for a newspaper, or writing a book, or doing anything else in the world. He is allowed to do nothing under this bill. Now, I apprehend there are many cases——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does the gentleman imagine that a judge or chief of a department or member of the Cabinet would construe it to be actual competition with private labor if an enlisted man should write an article for a newspaper or do the things just mentioned?

Mr. MANN. If he does it for pay, certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I would not say so.

Mr. PAYNE. That would certainly be in competition.

Mr. MANN. It is a prohibition absolutely.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It would not be competing with civilian labor, in my judgment.

Mr. MANN. But there are those who write for pay who insist that that is their trade or profession or art, and they are asking legislation from the Government against other people.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I recollect aright, all these military posts have a newspaper and a printing office. If we should pass this bill, then they would have to hire printers from the outside to come in and run their newspapers and printing offices.

Mr. MANN. They would not be permitted to edit newspapers, because that is something that can be done by civilians.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, is this resolution open to amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then I move to amend the resolution by inserting between the words "emolument" and "hire," in the seventh line, the word "or;" and to further amend by striking out the word "otherwise," in line 8, and striking out the word "or" at the end of the seventh line.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, after the word "emolument," insert the word "or;" and in line 8 strike out the word "otherwise."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution as amended.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the bill as amended read as it will go into effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution as amended will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter no enlisted man in the service of the United States, the Army and the Navy, respectively, whether a noncommissioned officer, musician, or private, shall be detailed or ordered or permitted to leave his post to engage in any pursuit, business, or performance in civil life for emolument or hire or when the same shall interfere with the customary employment and regular engagement of local civilians in their respective arts, trades, or professions: Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall in any way affect or render unlawful any contracts now existing and which are to be completed within twelve months from this date.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it was intended by the amendment to strike out the word "or" at the end of line 7. That ought to be done now.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 7, strike out the word "or."

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that from my district, and from different parts of the West, information has come to me favoring a proposition of this kind. I know that the musicians located in my own city are very much interested in it, and I am in favor of the proposition and sincerely trust that it will pass the House.

The amendment offered by Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey was agreed to.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I would like to know if this would deprive the Army and Navy from laying a cable, when so directed by the Government?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; the language is not broad enough.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I think it is broad enough. Is it so intended?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the gentleman will read the bill carefully——

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I have read it carefully.

Mr. BARTHOLDT (continuing). He will find that it is simply to prevent enlisted men from leaving their posts and entering into competition with private labor.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It says "emolument, labor, or hire."

Mr. HOPKINS. In the case the gentleman puts, they are working for the Government, and it would not be for hire within the meaning of this language.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. But the word "otherwise" means something.

Mr. HOPKINS. That has been stricken out.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I did not understand that that word had been stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH) there were—ayes 40, noes 29.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly evident that there is no quorum present.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS FROM FILE.

Pending the motion of Mr. PAYNE, by unanimous consent Mr. WARNOCK was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Marion T. Downey, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Attorney-General, transmitting a list of judgments rendered in favor of claimants and against the United States and defendant Indian tribes—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. OLMSTED, from the Committee on Elections No. 2, to which was referred the memorial of George C. R. Wagoner, contestant in the contested-election case of Wagoner against Butler, from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, reported a resolution (H. Res. 346), accompanied by a report (No. 2780); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Insular Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15510) to promote the efficiency of the Philippine constabulary, to establish the rank and pay of its commanding officers, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2781); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3516) granting an increase of pension to Ozro F. Cheney, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2756); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CROWLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15636) granting a pension to Matilda Tunison, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2757); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8152) granting an increase of pension to W. S. Hutchinson, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2758); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14963) granting an increase of pension to Herman Tuerk, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2759); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. NORTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7368) granting a pension to Thomas Morris, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2760); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DARRAGH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13477) granting an increase of pension to Jason Stevens, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 3761); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12322) granting a pension to William F. Wilcox, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2762); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7510) granting an increase of pension to E. M. Gammon, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2763); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. NORTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11311) granting an increase of pension to A. J. Hertzog, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2764); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2616) granting a pension to Mary J. Goodrich, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2765); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DARRAGH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4454) granting a pension to James H. Watts, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2766); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15480) granting an increase of pension to William S. Barker, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2767); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7736) granting an increase of pension to Albert W. Allen, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2768); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CROWLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5718) granting an increase of pension to James M. Blades, of McLeansboro, Ill., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2769); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11594) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Morrow, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2770); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15399) granting an increase of pension to Harry C. Fay, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2771); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CROWLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2264) granting an increase of pension to George H. Higgins, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2772); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14388) granting an increase of pension to Graham McClosson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2773); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12638) granting a pension to John W. Day, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2774); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5324) granting an increase of pension to C. L. Randall, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2775); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5119) granting an increase of pension to Samuel S. INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. QUAY. I present resolutions adopted by the Indian chief executives of the Five Tribes and leading Indians of the Indian Territory; and also resolutions adopted at a joint meeting of Indian Territory executive committee on Territorial legislation. These resolutions bear upon the same subject which was covered by the long telegram read at the instance of the chairman of the Committee on Territories a few days ago, and I should be glad to have them read. They are not long.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read and referred to the Committee on Territories, as follows:

Resolutions adopted by caucus of Indian chief executives of the Five Tribes and leading Indians of Indian Territory.

EUFAULA, IND. T., Friday, November 28, 1902.

Whereas the Five Civilized Tribes of the Indian Territory have by agreements made and entered into with the United States provided for the dissolution of their tribal governments; and

Whereas the changed conditions brought about by such agreements require a complete revolution in our land tenure and new laws and usages unknown to the Indians composing the Five Tribes of the Indian Territory, which conditions will require time for the new citizen to adapt himself to the changed order of things; and

Whereas these changes were apparent to the contracting parties at the time of the making of the said agreements, which is evidenced by the fact that a separate political organization was provided for the Indian Territory, and the period for dissolution as said tribal governments was fixed at March 4, 1906; and

Whereas citizens of the United States, and not Indians, now resident in and upon the lands of the Five Tribes, are making, by petition and lobby influence, efforts to induce the Congress of the United States to ignore the spirit and letter of agreements by placing the Indian Territory under the laws of Oklahoma Territory; failing in that, to organize a regular United States Territory out of the present judicial organization known as the Indian Territory, either of which propositions would delay the work of the Government as now organized and satisfactorily proceeding under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in our Territory for the fulfillment of the agreements referred to: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, By the duly authorized representatives of the Five Civilized Tribes in convention assembled at Eufaula, Ind. T., November 28, 1902:

That we affirm our confidence in the purpose of the United States Government to faithfully discharge the obligation she has assumed in her treaties with the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory.

We are opposed to and protest against any legislation by Congress that contemplates the annexation of the Indian Territory, or any part thereof, to the Territory of Oklahoma or to any State, and we insist upon our tribal government continuing intact and our tribal conditions remaining unchanged until March 4, 1906, at which time, should Congress deem it wise to change the present form of government in Indian Territory, we ask that a State be formed out of the territory composing the Indian Territory, without the preliminary steps of a Territorial form of government.

That the authority and supervision of the Department of the Interior over Indian affairs in the Indian Territory and the duties imposed on the Dawes Commission by such authority in the distribution of the land belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes are sufficient for the present demand of government and satisfactory to the owner of the soil.

That it is incumbent on us as self-governing people to propose a State form of government and take part in the establishment of the same for the country owned by us, to take effect at the dissolution of tribal government in 1906.

We most earnestly protest against the misrepresentations found in the petitions presented by the people assembling in conventions at different places in the Indian Territory purporting to represent the wishes of the Indian Territory, firmly believing as we do that they represent no part of the Indian population and a very small part of the white population of the Indian Territory in so far as they represent the people of the Indian Territory as asking for Territorial form of government or statehood jointly with Oklahoma.

Resolutions adopted at joint meeting of Indian Territory executive committee on Territorial legislation.

HOLDENVILLE, IND. T., Tuesday, November 25, 1902.

The following resolutions were then reported and unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That this convention of the several executive committees of the Indian Territory, while sympathizing with the people of the Territory of Oklahoma in their efforts to secure statehood and sincerely hoping they may attain it, is unalterably opposed to that portion of what is known as the omnibus statehood bill, now pending before the Senate of the United States, which contemplates and provides for the gradual absorption of the Five Civilized Tribes by the future State of Oklahoma.

"Resolved, That we are in favor of, and beg that Congress will enact immediately, a law giving to the people of the Indian Territory some form of local self-government, and we believe that what is known as the Moon bill meets the present requirements of our situation, both as to the noncitizen and the Indian, whose treaty rights it respects, and we heartily indorse said bill."

A bill (H. R. 3502) for the relief of the estate of M. J. Grealish, deceased; and

A bill (H. R. 5357) for the relief of William Leech.

The bill (H. R. 11576) granting permission to Capt. B. H. McCalla and others to accept presents and decorations tendered to them by the Emperor of Germany and others was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. 12002) to amend section 4386 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, striking out "twenty-eight consecutive hours" and "twenty-eight hours" and inserting "forty consecutive hours" and "forty hours," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 12705) to amend section 3536, Revised Statutes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 13404) fixing the punishment for the larceny of horses, cattle, and other live stock in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 15198) defining what shall constitute and providing for assessments on oil mining claims was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The bill (H. R. 15445) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River at Sand Bar Ferry, below the city of Augusta, Ga., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 15593) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

THE ISTHMIAN CANAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Acting Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in response to the Senate's resolution of June 30, 1902, requesting the Secretary of State "to send to the Senate a statement of the expenditures of the Isthmian Canal Commission, under the act approved March 3, 1899, 'making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes,' as the same are accounted for by said Isthmian Canal Commission, and also whether there is any deficit in the appropriation which is to be or has been provided for by further appropriations."

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State covering a statement showing the receipts and disbursements of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company for the months of May, June, July, August, September, and October, 1902, furnished by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission, in pursuance of section 11 of the "Act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory," etc., approved March 3, 1901.

THE AMERICAN RAILROAD COMPANY OF PORTO RICO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Referring to section 32 of the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith an ordinance approved by me on October 27, 1902, granting the consent of the executive council of Porto Rico to the assignment by the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico to Henry De Ford, his heirs, executors, and assigns, and to a proposed corporation to be designated and known as "The American Railroad Company of Porto Rico, Central Aguirre Operator," of the right to construct, operate, and maintain the railroad line from Ponce to Guayama, authorized by the executive council of Porto Rico on October 28, 1901, and to construct and operate a branch line from Ponce to the Ponce Playa and a branch line from Guayama to Arroyo.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, December 8, 1902.

SPANISH TREATY CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12764) amending the act of March 2, 1901, entitled "An act to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain," etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Does the bill refer to the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and reported favorably by that committee.

Mr. LODGE. I ask whether it refers to the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission? Does it provide for an appeal from the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission to the Supreme Court?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have an opportunity to examine the bill, Mr. President, and I must object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar, if there be no objection.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator will be obliged to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, which is the unfinished business before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There can be no unfinished business in the morning hour. The unfinished business at 2 o'clock next Wednesday is the statehood bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the "immigration bill."

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds that the unanimous consent originally granted that the bill should be read informally for amendment and that the committee amendments should first receive consideration attaches to the bill. So it will be read for amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill and stated the first amendment reported by the Committee on Immigration, which was in section 1, page 1, line 4, to strike out "one dollar and fifty cents" and insert "three dollars;" so as to read:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $3 for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States, or of the Dominion of Canada, the Republic of Cuba, or of the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it seems to me that before we proceed with the consideration of this very important measure it is due to the Senate that the chairman of the committee should make a general statement as to the changes in existing law that are made by the bill.

I will venture the further suggestion that inasmuch as the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] stated to the Senate that he proposed to offer certain amendments, it would be well for the Senate to know what those amendments are. I am not satisfied with the bill as it stands and will contest some of its provisions, but I do not want to be put in the attitude of opposing proposed amendments that possibly are to be cured by the action of the Senator from Massachusetts representing, as I apprehend he does, the Committee on Immigration.

Now, Mr. President, I think it would facilitate the passage of the bill if that procedure should be taken and the chairman of the committee first make a general statement as to what changes are contemplated, and then the Senator from Massachusetts state to the Senate what the proposed amendments are that he intends to offer.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think the bill should be read before a statement is made as to its character. At the proper time I shall be very glad to comply with the Senator's request.

This bill has been before Congress for many years. It has been known before the country as the Lodge bill. It is a codification of existing Treasury regulations and law, and contains the educational test, which is considered the most practical and effective method of preventing the undesirable class of immigration. The passage of the bill is recommended by the President of the United States specifically in his message to Congress.

If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit the bill to be read and have the somewhat unimportant committee amendments considered and agreed to, the members of the Committee on Immigration will, I am sure, be very glad to explain at length the character and details of the measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, there is just the difficulty. The Senate has given consent, as I understand it, that the bill shall be read and that committee amendments shall be considered as the bill is proceeded with. I have no objection to the bill itself being read, but——

Mr. LODGE. The committee amendments are to be considered first.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; the committee amendments have precedence; but I am quite unwilling that those amendments shall be adopted without a full understanding as to their purport, and I would also like to know in advance if the committee proposes to stand by the amendments as reported.

It has been frequently stated that this is but a codification of existing laws, and it is now for the first time said that the President of the United States recommends the passage of this bill. I do not think the President of the United States has done anything of the kind. So far as its being a codification is concerned, this little pamphlet that I hold in my hand contains all the legislation now on the statute books relating to immigration. It does not require any special codification for any intelligent man to understand what the laws are, but it is a very important matter to a great many interests in this country to understand fully and definitely what changes are proposed to be made by this proposed statute. I for one am unwilling that we should rush blindly through it and adopt amendments that will be troublesome without understanding what they signify.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think there is any proposition to rush blindly through the bill. I know no way of dealing with a bill reported by a committee and being read for amendment, except to take up the amendments as they arise and discuss them. That seems to me to be the business-like way of doing it.

I think the Senator from New Hampshire will find that the committee is prepared to explain all the amendments as they are reached. The language of the President to which the Senator from New Hampshire referred is as follows:

> I again call your attention to the need of passing a proper immigration law, covering the points outlined in my message to you at the first session of the present Congress; substantially such a bill has already passed the House.

That, I think, justifies the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The changes proposed by the committee in the House bill, as the Senator from Pennsylvania stated, are not very serious; but it seems to me the only way to get at it is to take the bill up and read it and discuss the amendments and the bill as we go along. That is the only way we ever legislate here, and I do not see any other way to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon. It is not an unusual procedure here for the Senator in charge of a bill to first make a general statement as to the proposed changes. However, I am not insistent upon that course. If the Senator thinks it desirable to proceed in the way in which he suggests, I will not interpose any special objection and will take occasion as the amendments are reached to ask for some such information as I desire to secure.

Mr. PENROSE. The course which I desire I believe to be the usual course, to have the measure read before further consideration is given to it. I therefore ask that the reading of the bill be proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want some information concerning that amendment. I have been unable, in the limited time that I have found it possible to give to the consideration of this bill, to discover any valid reason why this tax should be increased from $1 to $3. It is what is known as the head tax. The House of Representatives, in its wisdom or otherwise, increased the tax from $1 to $1.50, and the Senate in its judgment recommends a further increase to $3.

I find, Mr. President, among my papers that during the last session, when this bill was under consideration, or was about to be considered, I made some notes on this particular point, which I will take the liberty to inflict upon the Senate. As I understand the matter, the head tax is a charge against the transportation company and not against the alien, so that it has no influence in restricting immigration.

Under the present law the head tax is charged only against the steamship companies bringing aliens to seaports of the United States. The following are the provisions of law in respect thereto:

> That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 50 cents for each and every passenger, not a citizen of the United States, who shall come by steam or sail vessel from a foreign port to any port within the United States. The said duty shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port to which such passenger shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port, then to the collector of customs nearest thereto, by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of every such vessel, within twenty-four hours after the entry thereof into such port. (Sec. 1, act approved August 3, 1882.)

That statute was amended August 18, 1894, so as to read:

> That the head money from alien passengers on and after the 1st day of October next, collected under the act of August 3, 1882, to regulate immigration, shall be $1 in lieu of the 50 cents as provided in said act. (An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes. Approved August 18, 1894.)

Mr. President, this has been the uniform practice, as I understand the matter, since the passage of the first immigration law; and it seems to me ill advised, to say the least, to make this change arbitrarily without the most careful study and investigation of the subject.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question right there for information?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. Is there any law making any special disposition of this head tax for a special purpose, or does it go into the Treasury generally?

Mr. GALLINGER. My opinion is that it goes into the Treasury generally. The suggestion, I think, is made in the report of the committee that there will be some extra expenses connected with the administration of the amended law, and hence they think it is desirable to get more money out of what is called the head tax. I think there is very little force in the suggestion.

The committees of both Houses seem to have assumed that the failure of Congress in the past to impose the head tax on aliens crossing the frontier was an oversight, whereas as a matter of fact Congress for twenty years has refused to make this charge for good and sufficient reasons; and in 1884 Congress took notice of the fact that the head tax did not apply to aliens entering the country by land carriage.

Mr. President, that is one of the objections I have to this proposed legislation, that while heretofore the tax has been charged against the steamship companies—and the railroads, as I understand, have some understanding with the steamship companies—now it is proposed to impose it upon every alien that crosses the frontier in a railroad train or by any other mode of carriage. I think I shall be able to show that it is not only to be a great burden, but it is to be an inconvenience that the traveling public on the northern border will not submit to with very good grace.

The provision of the law to which I have just called attention is:

> That until the provisions of section 1, chapter 376, of the laws of 1882, shall be made applicable to passengers coming into the United States by land carriage—

Which never has been done—

> said provisions shall not apply to passengers coming by vessels employed exclusively in the trade between the ports of the United States and the ports of the Dominion of Canada or the ports of Mexico. (Sec. 22 of the act approved June 26, 1884.)

To understand the effect of the imposition of the head tax on passengers coming overland, let me cite an illustration, and if I do not state it correctly some member of the committee will of course point out the mistake that I shall make.

A tourist coming over the Canadian border is usually not a citizen or resident of Canada, and the railroad company will be taxed $3 every time a tourist crosses the line into the United States. I ask the chairman of the committee if that is his understanding of the bill?

Mr. PENROSE. That is not my understanding, Mr. President, of the effect of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is the Senator clear on that point?

Mr. PENROSE. I am perfectly clear on it, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, let us see what the bill says:

> That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $3 for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States or of the Dominion of Canada, the Republic of Cuba or of the Republic of Mexico * * * who shall come by steam, sail, or other vessel from any foreign port to any port within the United States, or by any railway or any other mode of transportation from foreign contiguous territory to the United States.

Now, Mr. President, if my contention is not correct, then certainly I fail to grasp the meaning of that language; but it is so clear that I must insist that my interpretation of the language is the correct interpretation.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The law makes the same application to persons coming over the border that it makes to other persons coming into this country. A tourist coming into this country from a foreign country is not an alien immigrant. For instance, the tourist coming from England by way of the port of New York does not come within the law applying to alien immigrants coming into this country.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PETTUS in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I simply want to make an inquiry. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to make a statement just now to the effect that this provision if enacted will not apply to any but alien immigrants. I do not find any provision in this bill that so restricts its application. The provision is that there shall be a tax of $3 paid by every passenger——

Mr. GALLINGER. Every passenger; certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. That may come into the United States. That, as I understand it, will include every kind of person—tourists, business men, and everybody else—all classes. Is it the purpose of the framers of the bill that the tax shall be imposed on all classes, or is it to be restricted to immigrants?

Mr. GALLINGER. Just there I want to emphasize that. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I fear, has not read the bill, although the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has told us that it is the Lodge bill, which it is not.

Mr. LODGE. I have read the bill a great many times. It does not follow that I have not read the bill because my interpretation of it is not the same as that of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly not; but nevertheless the bill says:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $3 for each and every passenger.

That is what it says. It does not say "alien immigrant" or immigrant of any description, but a "passenger." I insist that my interpretation of the bill is the correct interpretation, and I want to give an illustration.

A railroad company under that bill would be taxed $3 every time a tourist crossed the line into the United States, and as a glaring instance of the injustice that would result let me say that if a party of tourists wished to go from Toronto, in Canada, to Niagara Falls, N. Y., the fare for the round trip being 50 cents by boat, under the proposed law the transportation company would have to pay $3 for every passenger.

Now, I will make another illustration——

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. If the committee had had an opportunity to perfect the bill by proceeding with the reading of it and having the committee amendments and other amendments which I have, as chairman of the committee, to offer acted upon, there could have been no misapprehension regarding the matter. I had intended putting the word "alien" before "passenger," it having been inadvertently omitted there, as is shown by the fact that that language occurs in line 13—"alien" passenger—thereby removing the apprehension which the Senator has, and very properly has, from the present wording of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has received light, Mr. President. A moment ago, when I asked the Senator to make a statement as to the purpose of the bill and to tell the Senate what amendments were proposed, it was declined, and we were told that we must proceed with this bill and act upon these amendments. Now the Senator discovers that the bill is imperfect in its very first sentence almost, and he proposes to amend it, and I hope he will offer his amendment. I do not think, however, that his proposed amendment will cure the difficulty.

Mr. PENROSE. I have not had an opportunity to offer the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator had all the opportunity in the world. I asked the Senator to offer his amendment, and I asked the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to tell the Senate what his amendments were to be, and they declined, on the ground that the proper procedure was to read the bill and act upon the amendments that are proposed by the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is the proper procedure, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not the proper procedure. It is almost the universal practice in the Senate when amendments are to be offered to have them sent to the desk, read, and printed for the information of the Senate.

I am going to give one further illustration——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The suggestion I want to make is that the amendment which the Senator from Pennsylvania says he proposes to offer will not help the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not a particle.

Mr. FORAKER. As the bill now stands, it applies only to those who are aliens, for the language of the bill is that "every passenger not a citizen of the United States"——

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly.

Mr. FORAKER. That would describe any alien. To put in "alien passengers, who are not citizens of the United States," would not change the effect of it, I submit. I think there ought to be some such language as "all immigrant passengers." if that is a broad enough term to cover the purpose we have in mind. But certainly some limitation of that kind ought to be imposed.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will kindly allow us to go on with the amendments, I think he will see that there is no intention on the part of the committee to leave any such point doubtful. I do not myself think that tourists would be interfered with any more than they are under the present law; but to avoid any danger of that it is my intention to offer on behalf of the committee, on page 2, at the end of this section, the following:

The head tax herein provided for shall not be levied upon aliens in transit through the United States, nor upon aliens who have once been admitted into the United States and have paid the head tax who later shall go in transit from one port of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

The first sentence of that amendment covers entirely, I think, any objection of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I want to insist that the word "immigrant" is a much more expressive and appropriate term to accomplish what is desired than any other that has been suggested. The language employed by the Senator, which he proposed to put at the end of this section, is open to construction. That of itself is enough, I think, to lead to its rejection. If you insert the word "immigrant," everybody will understand what is meant; that is a fixed and definite term, and all who come as immigrants within the meaning of this law would pay whatever tax we see fit to impose, whether $3 or $1.50. But if you propose to put in any other kind of language there, you will very likely impose that tax upon those on whom we do not desire to impose it.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me to make a suggestion in the line of what the Senator from Ohio has just said, if it does not inconvenience the Senator from New Hampshire, I should like to do so now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the committee having this bill in charge is in session. I suppose no member of the committee will understand that any suggestion that is now made amounts either to criticism of the work of the committee or a desire to embarrass it in any way. Mechanism of this kind is like a great mechanical machine. No matter how careful the inventor was to perfect it, difficulties will come up in regard to its workings, great or small, when it is submitted to other hands than those of the inventor. If the committee are, as I understand, in session while this bill is going on from day to day, perhaps they will at their next session give some consideration to these matters.

The immigrant who comes here in an emigrant ship is, with the exception of the Englishman, including passengers from Scotland and Wales, covered by this language if he is a person of a different nationality from ours. So you do not have so much difficulty. But in making a system for the Canadian border, where, in some cases, people cross and recross from Montreal into New York or Boston, it is a very different thing.

If the officials at all these ports are to collect this tax, to use the language of the bill as it is now, for each and every passenger, with the exception of citizens of the United States or Canadian citizens, or citizens of the Republic of Cuba or of the Republic of Mexico, or bona fide residents, etc., how are they going to ascertain the facts in the brief time that a railroad train is detained at the border? In the case of a ship you can examine the passengers; you have got the ship's registry. But in the case of passengers by rail you have not got any registry, you have not got any detention of the vehicle in which they are brought into the United States, and you have not got any mode of ascertaining the facts. How, then, are you going to settle the question of citizenship?

The Commissioner-General of Immigration, under the thirty-fourth section, is to provide rules for the entry and inspection of aliens, but that is a pretty large power to give to a subordinate officer in the control of and interference with passengers by rail along our Canadian border. It seems to me that the bill itself should contain some solution of that problem and not leave it to this official. Very likely, on consideration, the committee will think that it is not practicable to go any farther, but I make this suggestion for their consideration at their meeting.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator will observe that the rules which are to be made by the Commissioner-General of Immigration are to be made under the direction and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is out of order.

Mr. HOAR. I will yield, if I may, vicariously to the Senator from Indiana and make him in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts yields to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I beg pardon of the Chair. I have already said all I desire to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule is that Senators should address the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think the committee ought to find, if they can, some other method of dealing with this question than that of allowing an official in the Department, whether with or without the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to stop indefinitely every railroad train that comes over the border from Canada, or to take out of a railroad train any passenger that he may see fit, while he is settling or deciding a disputed question about his residence or his domicile or his citizenship.

Mr. GALLINGER. I take it, Mr. President, that I am strictly within the rules of the Senate if I indulge upon this amendment in a discussion that will be somewhat broader than the amendment itself; and I am glad that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has called attention to the fact that if this bill becomes a law it will impose all sorts of difficulties and wrongs upon transportation companies that are plying between the Dominion of Canada and the New England States.

Mr. HOAR. And New York and Michigan.

Mr. GALLINGER. And New York, and also Michigan. In Europe, before a steamship sails——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am not fully advised upon that point, but does the Senator know whether that is not practically the system that is in vogue now?

Mr. GALLINGER. As I read the existing law, this matter is now determined with the steamship companies, and it is not imposed upon the transportation companies that carry these alien immigrants or passengers, or whatever they may be called, across the Canadian border.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. But are not the regulations arranged between the Immigration Bureau, steamship companies, and railroad companies subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. GALLINGER. There may be some regulations that I am not familiar with——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think they are subject to approval.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will call attention before I get through to section 10 of this bill, which I think imposes a burden which is not only oppressive, but unjust in the highest degree, upon the transportation companies. Of course if it is the purpose—and I take it it is not the purpose; and I want to withdraw any suggestion I have made which might seem to be a criticism upon the committee for the work they have done; I know how intelligent, how laborious, and how faithful they are to the trust imposed upon them in considering this great question; but nevertheless they may have made mistakes, as I make mistakes in the work of the committee that I chance to be in charge of—I was about to say that if it is intended to abolish the present inspection as it is now carried on in the ports of the United States, as the immigrant authorities have suggested in some publication it is intended to do, and move it to the frontier, why, then, Mr. President, those of us who are interested in the frontier traffic, or rather interested in behalf of our constituents in that matter, have a right to know that this is not going to work the great disadvantage and wrong that it appears to me it will necessarily do.

If the inspection is to be made on the line that divides Canada from New England, for instance, or from Michigan, or from New York, it is very important that we should understand the precise consequences that will flow from that change. At the present time it is, I believe, made at Quebec in the summer and St. Johns, New Brunswick, and Halifax, Nova Scotia, during the winter; and there it is determined whether these people shall enter the United States or not. If it is to be transferred to the border, we want some protection to our transportation interests, and we have a right to demand it.

As an illustration, let me call your attention to section 10 of this bill. It may be something of a digression, but I am going to talk about this matter in a desultory way, and perhaps talk a little more definitely as the different sections are reached. Section 10 says:

> That it shall be unlawful for any transportation company or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel to bring to any port within the United States any alien afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that any alien so brought to a port of the United States was afflicted with such a disease at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of such disease might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time, such transportation company or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $100 for each and every violation of the provisions of this section.

Now, Mr. President, I want to know, as a matter of information, how the Boston and Maine Railroad, for instance, is going to ascertain when they sell a ticket to a passenger at Sherbrooke, Canada, which is almost on the border, for any port in the United States, whether the passenger is afflicted with a disease or not? The railroad company has no power to compel an examination on Canadian soil; and if the railroad company had such power, I submit it would be an extraordinary spectacle to compel every immigrant, or, as this bill says, "every passenger," to submit to such examination to ascertain whether he had a disease or not. As I read the bill, it is going to be a tremendous burden upon some transportation companies, if, indeed, it does not become absolutely unendurable. It does seem to me that this distinguished committee, with its wisdom and its earnestness for the passage of improved immigration measures, might devise a bill that would be less burdensome on the transportation companies on the New England border.

Recurring to the first amendment, I am not disposed to contest it any further. I presume the Senate will adopt it and it will go into conference, but I want to say that in my investigations, which have not been very thorough, because I have been busy in other matters, I have utterly failed to discover any valid reason why at the present time the head tax should be increased from $1 to $3. The House has increased it from $1 to $1.50, and I submit that unless some evidence is forthcoming showing that there is a necessity for a head tax higher than that, unless it can be shown that the Treasury is suffering in some way and that we need this $2 extra above what the present law imposes, then we ought not to impose it upon these people or upon these transportation companies.

With that statement, Mr. President, and with the knowledge that if the amendment shall be adopted by the Senate it will go into conference between the two Houses, where it very likely will be satisfactorily adjusted, I shall interpose no further objection. But as other sections of the bill are reached I shall endeavor to get some further light on the subject.

The proposed amendment to which the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has called attention will undoubtedly to some extent remedy the difficulties of which I complain, but I quite agree with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] that the term "alien passenger" will not cover the difficulty and that it would be very much better to use the term "immigrant." I think the definition of the term "immigrant" is a person who comes into the country for the purpose of remaining.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I will read the definition of the term.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will not interrupt me at all. I should like to know just what it is.

Mr. FORAKER. The Century Dictionary gives as one of the definitions of the word "immigrant" a foreigner who enters a country to settle there.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I supposed.

Mr. FORAKER. That is its well-settled meaning, and it seems to me to insert the word "immigrant" before the word "passenger" makes all else unnecessary. It is simplest; this is denominated an immigration bill; and the term, aside from the dictionary definition, has a well-understood meaning in the statutory law of the country and in the practice of regulating immigration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in regard to the last point raised by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], I will say that this bill of course is intended to affect only immigrants, and it seems to me that in order to make it clear beyond a doubt it is better to use that word. The immigrant whom we desire to reach is the man who comes with the intention of remaining. We are not seeking to hamper tourists, but we seek to reach the immigrant class, and I think it would be just as well, in fact, I think it would be better, to use that word.

Now, Mr. President, as to the head tax. The committee were satisfied last spring that the present head tax, although it has hitherto proved sufficient, would very soon prove insufficient, and that it was necessary to have an increase of that tax, and their opinion has been justified by the course of events. The State of New York has refused very recently to take any more diseased immigrants into its hospitals. So many have come that it has become an immediate necessity of the Government to have proper hospital accommodation at the port of New York. That alone adds heavily to the necessary expenditures of the immigration department.

In the second place, it is absolutely necessary to increase the force along the border. That is in the interest of the transportation companies quite as much as it is in the interest of the immigrants and of the Government. At this moment and for months passed diseased immigrants, persons afflicted with loathsome and contagious diseases, insane persons, idiots, epileptics, who, under the laws, have been rejected at our ports on those grounds, have gone around through Canada and come into the United States in that way, owing to the absence of proper inspection at the border.

I am quite as much interested in the welfare of the transportation companies of New England as is the Senator from New Hampshire, as he well knows, but I do not believe it is for the welfare of those companies or for the welfare of the people of New England or of the United States that immigrants afflicted with contagious and loathsome diseases, who have been rejected at the port of New York, should be brought around into this country over the Mexican or Canadian border. We were told this very morning by the Commissioner of Immigration that immigrants now come over the Mexican border because we have been absolutely unable to place inspectors there, and if we can have a proper amount of money we can furnish a suitable inspection, which will be in the interest of all concerned. The Commissioner-General of Immigration, Mr. Sargent, and the inspector at the port of New York both testified before the committee this morning in the strongest terms that it was absolutely necessary that they should have more money from the head tax; that they had to supply not only the needs of the present, but had to have an eye to the future; that a very small decline in immigration at the present rate would produce a deficit. Hitherto there has been a surplus.

Mr. President, it has been the uniform policy of the United States to make the immigrants pay this small tax in order to meet the expenses which their own coming causes. The transportation companies and the steamship companies do not pay this out of their own pockets. They are admirable enterprises, but they are not philanthropic enterprises. They get back every cent of this tax out of their charge to the passenger. It all comes, ultimately, out of the immigrant. It is a very small tax, indeed. If we do not raise the money from the immigrants who come into the country, we shall have to tax the American people for it. It has been the policy of the Government to make the immigrants pay their own expenses, and I think it is a just policy.

We have this very year to spend in the neighborhood of a million dollars to supply proper buildings for the immigrant service at the ports of New York and Boston alone, owing to the great increase in the coming of immigrants. We are giving to those people the greatest privileges in the world in admitting them to this country and to the opportunities of American citizenship, and it seems to me it is only just that they and not the people of the United States should be taxed to meet those expenses. But to enforce the existing law, whether or not we pass a line of additional legislation, you must increase your head tax or tax the people of the United States. It seems to me only proper in this matter to be guided by the distinct declaration of the Commissioner-General of Immigration and the commissioner at the port of New York that they must have more money if they are to meet these expenses properly, and that the increase of diseased immigrants requires absolutely large additional expenditures at the port of New York for hospital service alone.

Mr. President, I can only rely on those gentlemen who are charged with this duty. I believe they are conscientious, careful men, and when they state to the committee that they regard it as of the utmost importance that there should be this slight increase—that is, not slight in increase, but the total amount is slight—I think it will be completely justified by the facts. I think we ought to give to the immigration service this increased amount of money. We must raise it in one way or the other, and I think it is only justice to impose it upon the immigrants themselves.

Now a word as to the transportation companies over the border, to which the Senator from New Hampshire has alluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me for just a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. For information I wish to ask the Senator if there is a statute prohibiting the Treasury officials from using other money than that derived from the head tax for the purpose contemplated in this bill in the respect the Senator has been discussing?

Mr. LODGE. They can use no money except that derived from the immigration fund, into which the head tax is paid, together with certain sums that come from the sale of licenses for different purposes, and money directly appropriated by Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just there, Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he really apprehends that if there was a slight deficit in this matter there would be any difficulty in getting an appropriation from Congress for this purpose?

Mr. LODGE. I do not apprehend that there would be any difficulty. It is not that I fear the service is going to stop. I have not any doubt that we shall appropriate this year out of the Treasury, paid by the people of the United States, $500,000 to build a hospital at Ellis Island, $90,000 to give them a ferryboat, and $40,000 to give them a tugboat, all of which are absolutely necessary at that great port; and that we shall spend some money to make at Boston a place where we can absolutely shelter immigrants, which does not exist to-day; but I do think it is a matter of justice that those people who come in and get so much should pay something toward their own expenses.

I am not so tender about taxing the immigrant. I think he can afford to pay something when he comes into this country, and I can not see why the alien should be relieved and the citizens of the country who carry the whole burden should also have the burden of providing for him. It is not that I fear that we shall not get the money for the immigration service. It is because I believe the money ought to be got in the proper way, along the general line of policy which the Government has always pursued hitherto in all its immigration legislation.

Mr. President, in regard to the matter of which the Senator from New Hampshire spoke, about immigrants coming over the border from Canada, I should be the last to wish to put any obstruction or any difficulties in the way of those transportation companies. Those great companies are of the utmost importance, and their business is of the utmost importance, not only to my State, but to New England, for all our interests there are bound up together, but I do think it is all wrong that immigrants rejected at the port of New York should be enabled to come around through Canada and slip in over the border there. There is not the slightest desire on the part of any of the committee—and I am sure the Senator from New Hampshire realizes that—to put burdens or annoyances in the way of the transportation companies. All we desire to do is to shut out at the borders the same class of people that everybody agrees it is well to shut out at the port of New York.

We impose heavy burdens upon the steamship companies coming to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and New Orleans in regard to this matter of incoming immigrants. Now, the effect of the present situation is to turn the immigrants away from the lines plying directly to our own ports and to send them around by the Canadian lines. If that were all it would merely be a matter of competition between different lines of transportation; but the injustice of it is that men come over the border whom the best opinion of the United States, formulated in law, has decided should be excluded from this country. The commissioner of immigration at New York testified this very morning before the committee that men rejected at New York on account of loathsome and contagious diseases and others who were excluded under existing law were slipping around by Canada in increased numbers all the time, defeating in that way the very purpose of our legislation.

The committee desires only to make the bill practical, not to make it burdensome on the railroads. The object is to secure some proper inspection, so that immigrants whom it is and has been the policy of this country for years to exclude shall not get in at one door when another door has been shut to them. That is the whole purpose of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I am interested in what the Senator from Massachusetts says. How does the immigrant who comes to the port of New York and is there rejected get an opportunity to come through Canada? Where does he go?

Mr. LODGE. He is deported under the law.

Mr. HALE. That is, sent back to his place?

Mr. LODGE. To the port of departure. He then takes a Canadian steamship and comes through.

Mr. HALE. The port of departure is in Europe?

Mr. LODGE. In Europe.

Mr. HALE. So he must go back to Europe and then start again and land again on this side?

Mr. LODGE. I suppose that is the way. I did not ask the Commissioner what line the immigrant took.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator stated it, it is a very objectionable thing, but it struck me that probably it is not often done, because the course to be pursued and the pains to be taken would deter an immigrant.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will understand that they have found persons who have done just that thing, who have gone around; that is, actual persons who have been rejected at New York and who have worked around through Canada. Of course they are a comparatively small number.

Mr. HALE. Yes, I suppose so.

Mr. LODGE. But the effect is to increase the coming of that class of persons directly through Canada. They take the lines from Europe to the St. Lawrence and come down. It has become so bad, it has become such an abuse, that within a very few days Canada has passed some very stringent regulations in regard to that class of immigrants, which, I think, will be of great service to us. That shows how much that practice has extended. It is advertised abroad, as we are informed by the commissioners of immigration, that persons can get into the United States over the border without an examination. They are publicly notified. It is turning the stream of objectionable immigrants—I am speaking of those objectionable under existing law and not under any change proposed here—over the border instead of through the ports, where the inspection is pretty thorough.

Mr. HALE. I am interested in this matter because my own State projects into Canada and New Brunswick and has a great length of international border line. Now, is it the fact, the actual fact, the dangerous fact, that transit from Canada to this country by an immigrant is easy without proper examination?

Mr. LODGE. It is to-day. It is an easy thing. At the Mexican border there is no inspection at all, and it is an easy thing, as I understood from the Commissioner-General of Immigration this morning; and he also said it was an easy thing to get in from the Canadian border. They have been improving the service this summer. They have been putting more inspectors along the Canadian line. They have put on a special man, Mr. Watchorn, to take charge of the whole line of frontier on the north. That is one of the reasons for the additional expenditures to which I have alluded.

Mr. HALE. I am aware they have done that.

Mr. LODGE. They have done that because the abuse became so great.

Mr. CARMACK. How does this bill propose to deal with that matter?

Mr. LODGE. The bill proposes to deal with it only by giving the department additional money and by certain small administrative arrangements. There is very slight change in the law in that way.

Mr. HALE. The main thing is to give more money to provide a proper force.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. HALE. That is it.

Mr. LODGE. It will have to be provided by Government appropriations or from the head tax.

Mr. HALE. I should like to see some legislation which would secure a proper enforcement of the provisions of the law on the land, not at the seaports. They are taken care of.

Mr. LODGE. The seaports are taken care of. That is the only purpose here. There is no purpose of persecuting a railroad or interfering with its legitimate business or holding up its passenger trains. The only object is to keep out immigrants who are kept out at other ports and for whose admission the border is being used. As I said, it has become such a serious abuse that Canada herself has passed some very strict laws in regard to it, because the looseness of the administration on our border—I do not mean at this moment, but within a year or two—was such as to turn the stream of objectionable immigration into Canada.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my opinion is that there is to-day less need of money for this purpose than there was a year ago. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says that upon the authority of the Commissioner-General of Immigration he can say that immigrants rejected at the port of New York are deported to Europe and then return through Canada and get into the United States.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will excuse me for a minute. I did not mean to say they came in that way. I expressly said that I did not know how they did it. What I did say was that the commissioner of immigration of the port of New York had stated explicitly to the committee this morning that immigrants rejected at New York came into this country through Canada. How they did it he did not explain, and I did not think to ask him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course they were deported, if the United States officials did their duty, and then they purchased another ticket and came through Canada and got into the United States.

I quite agree with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that those cases must be very small in number—about as frequent as angels' visits are to people who have no communion with angels. I think it is simply a visionary fear and that there is nothing to substantiate it.

I think we need less head-tax money than we are now collecting, rather than more. The Senator from Massachusetts has called attention to the fact that Canada has legislated on this subject. He said Canada legislated a few days ago. It was not long ago. Canada, on the 8th day of September of the present year, issued a proclamation which I should like to have read, in order that it may go into the RECORD. It will be seen that because of the action Canada has taken there is now very much less danger of infected or diseased immigrants getting into the United States over the Canadian border than there was prior to the 8th day of September. In fact, if Canada enforces that provision of law, as Canada is in the habit of enforcing her laws, the danger will be reduced to a minimum, as there will be under that law an almost absolute impossibility of any diseased immigrants reaching the United States from Canada. I should like to have the Secretary read the proclamation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

CANADA.

Edward the Seventh, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India, to all to whom these presents shall come or whom the same may in any wise concern, greeting:

A PROCLAMATION.

E. L. NEWCOMBE,
Deputy of the Minister of Justice, Canada:

Whereas in and by an act of the parliament of Canada passed in this second year of our reign, and entitled "An act to amend the immigration act," the said immigration act is amended by inserting the following section immediately after section 24 thereof:

"24A. The governor-general may, by proclamation or order, whichever he considers most expedient, and when ever he deems it necessary, prohibit the landing in Canada of any immigrant or other passenger who is suffering from any loathsome, dangerous or infectious disease or malady, whether such immigrant intends to settle in Canada or only intends to pass through Canada to settle in some other country.

"2. Such prohibition may be absolute or may be accompanied by permission to land for medical treatment only, for a period to be determined as provided by order or proclamation."

And whereas in and by the said first-mentioned act it is further in effect provided that any person landed in Canada from a vessel in contravention of the immigration act or any order in council or proclamation lawfully issued thereunder, or any person landed for medical treatment who remains in Canada in contravention of such order or proclamation, may be apprehended, without a warrant, by any immigration agent or other government officer, any may be compelled to return or be taken on board the vessel, and by force, if necessary; and every owner or master of a vessel who violates the provisions of this act, or who aids or abets any immigrant or passenger in acting in contravention of such order or proclamation, or who refuses or neglects to take back on board the vessel any such immigrant or passenger, shall incur a penalty not exceeding ten hundred dollars and not less than one hundred dollars in the case of each and every of such immigrant or passenger.

Now know ye that by and with the advice of our privy council for Canada we do hereby absolutely prohibit the landing in Canada of any immigrant or other passenger who is suffering from any loathsome, dangerous, or infectious disease or malady, whether such immigrant or passenger intends to settle in Canada or only intends to pass through Canada to settle in some other country, and who in the opinion of our minister of the interior of Canada, or of any officer to whom he intrusts the matter, should be so prohibited: Provided, That any such immigrant or passenger may be permitted to land in Canada for medical treatment only, for such period as the said minister or such officer may deem reasonable and sufficient to effect his cure.

Of all which our loving subjects and all others whom these presents may concern are hereby required to take notice and to govern themselves accordingly.

In testimony whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patent and the great seal of Canada to be hereunto affixed.

Witness our right trusty and right well-beloved cousin and councilor the Right Honorable Sir Gilbert John Elliot, Earl of Minto and Viscount Melgund of Melgund, County of Forfar, in the peerage of the United Kingdom: Baron Minto of Minto, County of Roxburgh, in the peerage of Great Britain: Baronet of Nova Scotia, Knight Grand Cross of our most distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, etc., Governor-General of Canada.

At our government house in our city of Ottawa this 8th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1902, and in the second year of our reign.

By command.

JOSEPH POPE,
Under Secretary of State.

Mr. GALLINGER. Inasmuch as Canada has within three months legislated on this subject and proposes to have as strict a supervision over immigrants as the United States has, a much smaller number of these people will reach our borders, and hence there will be occasion to expend less rather than more money than we have done in the past.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, the action of the Canadian government, to which reference is made, was before the Commissioner-General of Immigration when he advised the committee that the increase of the head tax was necessary to enable our Government to properly execute the immigration laws. The Commissioner-General, in his report for the year ending June 30, 1902, says:

It is with unmixed gratification that the Bureau reports recent action by the parliament of the Canadian Dominion excluding from admission thereto aliens afflicted with loathsome and dangerous contagious diseases. This legislation has not as yet been put into operation by order in council, but it is learned that it soon will be, and the Bureau feels assured that when such action is taken the most discouraging factor in the administration of the provisions of the immigration laws for the exclusion of disease will have been removed.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has expressed in the main the views I entertain upon the measure now under consideration. I do not believe the head tax should be onerous or that it should be imposed for any ulterior purpose. I do believe that the immigrant should himself bear all of the expense necessary to administer our immigration laws. If buildings are needed for an immigrant station; if hospitals are necessary at ports of entry for the purpose of caring for the aliens afflicted, I believe the expense should be borne, not by the people of the United States, but by those who are desirous of entering this country and enjoying our hospitality. There is an equity in it, Mr. President. It seems to me it would be unjust were we to impose this burden upon our own people.

What is $3 for admission into all the privileges which Americans enjoy? It is certainly a very moderate tax, and one which can be easily borne and which will be cheerfully paid when it is remembered that it is to be used to maintain the immigration service. The fact is shown by testimony before the committee, as stated by the junior Senator from Massachusetts, that largely increased expenses will be incurred in the enforcement of the laws along the Canadian border and along the Mexican border as well.

Then it will be observed that there is an imperative demand for additional facilities at the port of New York and also at the port of Boston. Permit me to read a paragraph from the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration as to the necessity of increased facilities at Boston:

The port next in importance to New York is that of Boston. Not near so many aliens seek an entrance there as at the former port, but the number is nevertheless large, and the conditions involved in the enforcement of the law there are in some respects more embarrassing than at any other Eastern port. It receives, as New York also receives, alien passengers coming there at regular intervals by trans-Atlantic lines; but it also has what New York does not have to contend with—the embarrassment of handling passengers brought from Canadian ports.

Some of the latter are Canadians, of whom no head tax can be collected under the provisions of law, and some are Europeans who have resided a greater or less time in the Dominion. Besides these there is an unceasing flow of countless small craft, schooners, etc., coming from various points in maritime Canada and arriving at all times, inspection of each one of which must be made to detect and prevent violations of the immigration laws. It requires no argument to prove that these conditions are such as to tax the ingenuity, industry, patience, and good sense of the inspection officers, even if every aid in the power of Congress to provide were furnished at that port.

As a matter of fact, nothing has been furnished at Boston except a few office rooms on Long Wharf as a central meeting place for the officers, the conduct of clerical work and official correspondence, and the filing of records. The result is thus graphically stated in a report of Commissioner Billings, to whose unflagging energy and fidelity to the service it is a pleasure to bear witness:

"For the fiscal year ending June 30 instant, we shall have examined between 42,000 and 43,000 alien immigrants from trans-Atlantic ports. We shall also have examined about 20,000 aliens from Nova Scotian ports. These figures do not include American citizens in either case, which would swell the total by about 30,000. * * *

"At New York the immigrants are landed at one place. The boarding officers at that port examine (only) the cabin passengers aboard ship. At Philadelphia and Baltimore the passenger ships stop at one place. At Boston we examine the cabin passengers on the ship. But instead of discharging the immigrants at one central point, we have to go to at least eight different, widely separated docks to make our examinations.

"We also have to examine the Nova Scotia passengers at their docks and have to sign cattlemen at different places, so that we are liable to be at South Boston, East Boston, Charlestown, Chelsea, and the city proper the same day."

This condition seems sufficiently serious to call for reform simply in the interest of an effective economy of the services of administrative officers; but the importance of erecting a landing station is reenforced by the fact that detained immigrants must be kept on board the various vessels on which they were brought until their cases are finally disposed of. This means serious discomfort to the immigrants themselves, the wide separation at the same time of the inspectors and other officers, and the chance of a defeat of the purposes contemplated by the law through communication with and coaching by outside persons interested in landing proscribed aliens or their escape.

I have therefore to recommend that the subject be called to the attention of Congress, with the urgent request that an appropriation be made for the building of a suitable immigrant station at the port of Boston.

Mr. President, how much will be required to carry out the recommendation of the Commissioner-General I do not know, but, judging from our experience at Ellis Island, the sum will necessarily be large. In the interest of the service I visited Ellis Island a few weeks ago. There I discovered that the conditions are such as to call loudly and imperatively for a very large appropriation by Congress. Several hundred thousand dollars will be needed to enlarge the buildings and improve the facilities there in the interest of the immigrants themselves. Who, Mr. President, should bear all of this expense? It seems to me in all fairness and all kindness it should be borne by those who enter our ports from abroad for permanent residence in the United States.

There is no disposition, as I said before, to impose onerous conditions. Only those which are equitable and fair should be considered. I share the sentiment expressed by the junior Senator from Massachusetts that there is no purpose to impose hard terms upon the transportation lines doing business between Canada and the United States. There should be no provision of this law which would interrupt the freest possible passage across the border of the citizens of Canada and the United States. The bill is aimed at only one class of those who may seek to cross the Canadian border, and that is those immigrants from noncontiguous countries who may seek to violate the expressed prohibitions contained in the laws of the United States.

If the bill presented by the committee is unduly restrictive, if it tends to interrupt the ready communication of citizens of contiguous territory with the United States, I know the committee will be obliged to the gentlemen who raise the question for any suggestions which will make the provisions entirely fair and adequate.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana a question before he sits down, if it will be agreeable to him.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Oh, entirely; it is entirely agreeable.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to preface it with a word or two. The Senator from Indiana, as I am glad to hear from him, has taken unusual pains to inform himself as to the mechanism by which the existing law is enforced. He has visited Ellis Island for that purpose, and his report is an interesting one.

Now, I understand that nobody is to be admitted over the border without the payment of this duty except citizens of the United States, Mexico, Canada, or Cuba, or bona fide residents "of the said Dominion or Republics for one year, continuously, prior to application for admission." Those exceptions are to be enforced when a railroad train comes into the United States with passengers.

Then, in addition to that, as now at seaports, the classes enumerated in section second—idiots, insane persons, the person who has a dangerous contagious disease, the person who has been convicted of a felony, polygamists, anarchists, persons who have been induced to come in by an agreement or contract for labor, and so on—are to be kept out absolutely. The others, not of the excepted classes, are to be kept out until they pay $3 apiece. That is to be done when a railroad train which crosses the border four times, perhaps, a day comes in from Canada.

Now, what I want to know, if the Senator will tell me, is what is the mechanism by which that is to be done? Is it proposed to have a mechanism like that which is established at a seaport, which the Senator has described, with its buildings, its physicians, its hospital service, its protracted examination in the case of a contagious disease? There is to be the ascertainment in some way of the question whether the man who presents himself has been a bona fide resident in Canada for a year and whether he is one of the persons prohibited by reason of his opinions or character or previous life?

Is there any existing mechanism which is adapted to a railroad train by which all the men who paid for their tickets over the border are to be sifted out? If not, is it safe, within any legislative precedent, to give practically to the Commissioner-General of Immigration the vast power to construct all this mechanism and incur all this expense?

Now, there is my trouble with this matter, which I suppose the Senator can remove.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator will appreciate that it is impossible, by any statute, to prepare all of the details and mechanism necessary to carry into effect a great law like this. We can lay down certain general principles, but when we come to carrying those principles into effect we must repose somewhere a very large discretion.

The Senator will recall the amendment read a few moments ago by his colleague which he proposes to offer to the bill on behalf of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I did not hear it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. As it bears upon the matter concerning which the Senator interrogates me, I will read it to him:

On page 24, section 26, add at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this section or in this act shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from arranging from time to time, and it shall be his duty so to arrange, in accordance with existing contracts with railroad and steamship lines in foreign contiguous territory, or in accordance with such contracts as he may enter into in the future with such or other transportation lines, for the examination and payment of head tax of aliens landing in ports in said foreign contiguous territory and destined for the United States, such examination to be held at such ports or places in said foreign contiguous territory as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate. Such examination shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, dispense with the necessity for further examination at United States border ports under this act."

I think that meets the Senator's difficulty.

Mr. HOAR. Now, that is a good thing in itself. But suppose my honorable friend from Indiana goes to Toronto one afternoon from Buffalo, and looks around the city and comes back the same afternoon, as he did, and he happens to meet probably the only man in the United States of whom it could be true, a customs officer who is not acquainted with his picture, which is represented so often in newspapers and periodicals. He is on his way from Toronto to Buffalo. What is he going to do to show that he is a citizen of the United States, that he is one of these excepted classes, and that he has not some microbe that will promote contagious disease? What is going to happen to him that minute, I should like to know?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think under the provisions of the proposed amendment that is a matter to be arranged——

Mr. HOAR. Will he be examined at Toronto?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is a matter the Secretary of the Treasury will determine.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. My understanding now is, and I make the statement subject to correction, that by arrangement or contract between the Treasury Department and the transportation lines doing an inter-Canadian and United States business, passengers on the trains are not subjected to the minute examination contemplated by the law. I think the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is advised about that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would not agree to that at all, Mr. President. It is made obligatory to see that they are not diseased, and I do not think——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Our officers are not stationed at the border.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; they are going to be.

Mr. HOAR. They are going to be. That is the proposed law.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. While they may be stationed there, the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Massachusetts expressly provides that all that international traffic shall be conducted under such rules as may be established between the transportation lines and the Treasury Department.

Mr. GALLINGER. But if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, I should like to suggest that the Secretary of the Treasury can not make a regulation that will govern the case the Senator from Massachusetts has cited, applying to the Senator from Indiana. He can only make general regulations, and if it is necessary to make those regulations why put the provision in the bill at all?

Mr. HOAR. I do not mean to say that I shall vote against the bill. We have heard nothing as yet from the committee, and I am merely raising questions as we go along for the sake of having it well protected, and not in any hostile spirit. But if my friend from Indiana will pardon me one moment and hear what I have to say, although it is only a repetition, I am rather an obscure person compared to my friend from Indiana, and if I go across to Toronto as he did once, which is the case I put, I do not quite like to have the question whether I have got to stay in quarantine until I can send home and get the evidence about my character depend on some regulation or contract which has been made between a railroad company and the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not think that would be a very safe thing to do.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I should like to ask my distinguished and honorable friend from Massachusetts what would be his suggestion? Shall we exercise no control at the border? Shall we have no supervision? If we are to have any, what shall it be?

Mr. HOAR. I do not think I am bound to answer that question at this moment. I am not on the committee. I have not framed a bill. I have not undertaken to deal with this subject with the responsibility of enacting the form of a bill. All I ask is whether the committee do not think that there should be something more in the bill.

I confess I would rather have the existing law as it is applied to Canada, and as it has stood for a hundred or more years, except with certain modifications, continue ten years more than to have the things which it seems may occur under this measure happen to American citizens who are coming back from Canada. In the due course of business I ask the Senator whether the committee can not frame some mechanism which will prevent leaving that large and dangerous discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury, who has got ten thousand other important matters on his mind and who must of necessity practically take his direction and advice in this matter from subordinate officers? That is my query.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, the committee have no purpose that is in conflict with the object the Senator has in mind. They do not want to put anything in this bill that will interfere with the freest intercommunication between the people of the United States and the people of Canada. I am speaking only as an humble and obscure member of the committee, but it has been my opinion that the bill does not infringe upon that free communication.

We think we have left the door wide open. We have given the Secretary of the Treasury discretion so that while we are accommodating the free intercommunication of the citizens of the two countries we establish safeguards against the admission of aliens who are debarred by the provisions of our immigration laws. We do not wish that there should be an avoidance of our immigration laws by way of Canada. We have observed, as has been stated by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], that many of those who have been excluded at the port of New York have subsequently entered the United States by way of Canada. The Senator agrees with me that that is wrong; that our laws must be enforced; that there must be no evasion of them. He agrees with me and with the committee that the distinctly prohibited classes here are properly excluded.

Now, what we want to accomplish by this law is to prevent these objectionable classes from coming across our northern border. It is not an easy subject to control, because we will have two classes seeking admission from the Dominion of Canada; first, the citizens of the Dominion who come upon proper missions, and then we will have those from Europe who are seeking to avoid our laws. The two classes offer themselves for admission into the United States at the Canadian border.

Mr. CULLOM. At the same time.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes, sir; at the same time. There must rest in some authority, Mr. President, the discretionary power to say which shall be admitted and which shall be excluded.

I know it is a difficult subject to deal with. The committee, after giving careful consideration to the matter, have felt that there was no better and wiser or more effective way than to leave in the administrative officers the discretionary power to make such rules and regulations with the transportation lines crossing the border as would admit the one class and exclude the other without undue or vexatious interruption.

If we have not accomplished the desired result, the committee will be glad to receive from the honorable Senator from Massachusetts any suggestions which will make the law perfect. The honorable Senator has good opinions, much knowledge, and great facility in using the English language to accomplish the popular desire, and the committee will be delighted to receive from him any draft of an amendment to accomplish the object we all have in view.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, before the Senator from Indiana quits this subject, I desire to ask of him, or of some one else who has been having this bill in charge, a question. I want to premise, however, by saying that I am not opposed to this measure. I believe that we ought to have some improvement in our immigration laws, and I hope this bill affords it. I am willing to be governed, as far as I can, by the judgment of the committee in that respect, but before I vote for this bill or any of the controverted propositions in it I want to understand it. That is the only reason why I rise to make some inquiry.

Before I put the question, I wish, however, to remark that I am not opposed, at least not as at present advised, to the sum fixed, of $3, to be paid by each immigrant who comes. I take it the committee have investigated that subject, and that they know the expenses to our Government to provide suitable regulations for immigrants coming into this country, and that they have fixed this amount with reference to that sum, as they have told us. I am not disposed to question their judgment in that respect.

Neither am I disposed to question the judgment of the committee that there should be some kind of suitable regulation of immigrants coming across the border from Canada and from Mexico. Just what those suitable regulations should be I do not know. It would seem from the remarks made by the Senator from Indiana that he has not any very well-defined idea except only that we should leave it to the administrative officers to work out the details. It may be that that is all that can be done by legislation.

But what I observe that gives rise to the question I want to ask is that in this bill it is provided that its provisions shall not apply to immigrants coming into the country from Canada or Mexico or Cuba who are citizens of those countries or who have lived there in good faith as residents of those countries for a period of one year prior to the time when they undertook to come into this country.

Now, what I want to know is whether or not the committee have considered one point. I suppose they have, and I should like to have their answer to the question that arises in my mind. Have the committee considered the question whether that provision is not in violation of the most-favored-nation clause of all our treaties of commerce and amity? It seems to me that it is.

I do not know, in the first place, Mr. President, why there should be any exemption of the provisions of this law in its application to objectionable classes of immigrants from Canada and Mexico and Cuba. I do not understand why a different rule should be applied to them from that which we are now establishing to be applied to immigrants from every other country. If a man be of the objectionable character which we are undertaking to legislate about in this bill, he ought to be excluded, no matter from what country he may come. That does not help his cause any.

I, as I said, rose simply to ask the question whether or not that has been considered and whether or not the committee are satisfied that it is competent for us to exempt immigrants coming from those countries from the application of this statute without violating our treaty obligations in the respect I have mentioned.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the committee has given some consideration to the point raised by the Senator from Ohio, and in the opinion of the committee this provision does not conflict with our treaty or international obligations. A point in relation to our treaty obligations was raised in connection with the legislation pertaining to the exclusion of the Chinese. This legislation is in the nature of police regulation. It is an effort on our part to keep out elements which will not assimilate with our population—alien elements, which lead to disorder if they get into our country. This legislation is for the protection of our domestic peace and upon broad lines of that character, regardless of treaty obligations or international obligations. As a matter of national self-preservation and national well-being we have a right to say who shall enter and who shall not.

Of course it would be possible to strike out these exceptions, but it would lead up to great inconvenience and discomfort. On the broad lines upon which this measure is based we are enacting legislation for our own domestic tranquillity and for the protection of American citizenship.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire whether it would be now in order to offer an amendment to the first section in the nature of a proviso. I wish to offer it and have it printed.

Mr. PENROSE. It can be offered by unanimous consent, I suppose, Mr. President.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be printed, anyway.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Any amendment is legitimate if it be to a committee amendment; otherwise, under the unanimous-consent agreement, it would not be in order until the committee amendments are completed.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it would be well to allow the amendment to be printed, at any rate, so that we may know what it comprehends before we get to the point where the question is to be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly it can be received and printed.

Mr. MORGAN. I give notice, then, that I will at the proper time offer the proviso which I send to the desk as an amendment to the first section of the bill, and I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. MORGAN. I think it had better be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1 it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That the several State and Territorial governments are authorized to deposit in the Treasury of the United States, from time to time, sums of money to be applied to the payment of the license tax of such immigrants as shall find homes within their borders; the money so deposited to be applied under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be ordered to be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have no desire at this time to enter upon a discussion of the question which I asked of the Senator having this bill in charge, but at a later time in the consideration of this bill I probably shall do so. I make that announcement simply because the answer the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has made does not satisfy my mind on the subject. I have a very distinct recollection of the Chinese-exclusion bill and the discussion that we had when that bill was under consideration, but I do not remember that any such question as this was involved in that legislation. The legislation which we were then enacting was legislation under our treaty with China, and it was legislation the purpose of which was to give effect to our reservations of rights under our treaty stipulations with China. We had clearly an undoubted right in the exercise of our police power to enact the kind of legislation that was enacted in that instance. But this is not that kind of a case, as I understand it. I do not say this in a controversial sense, but only to apprise the Senator having the bill in charge of what is passing in my mind and why it is that I may want later to detain the Senate a few minutes to say something on the subject.

Here we are enacting legislation that is as broad as all the countries of the world combined, for it is to apply to all, and the exemption which we make in favor of Canada and Cuba and Mexico is not an exemption that can be said to be based on the exercise of the police power; but it is an exemption to one country in the nature of a favor, which is not extended to any other country excepting those countries that are named. We do not say that people of a certain class coming from Mexico or coming from Cuba or coming from Canada shall be subjected or shall not be subjected, as the case may be, to the provisions of this act; but we say this act shall have no application whatever to people, no matter of what class they may be, coming from those particular countries. In other words, it is a favor to those countries which, in the exercise of our police power, we deny to other countries, and it seems to me that it is a violation of that clause of our treaty.

I do not wish, however, to detain the Senate further at this time with regard to that matter, but later, if I should desire upon examination of the question to speak, I shall take the liberty of doing so.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I did not intend to convey to the Senator from Ohio the impression that the point raised by him was identical with the points raised in reference to the Chinese-exclusion legislation. I am fully aware of the fact that the questions were different. I meant to say that they were both questions pertaining to treaty obligations and international obligations, and that the answer to those objections was contained in the fact that this legislation is based upon broad principles of national self-preservation, and in the opinion of the committee it can be sustained on those grounds.

As regards the $3 head tax, after the explanations which have been given by the Senator from Massachussets [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], it is hardly necessary for me to detain the Senate by any further remarks upon that subject; but it is a matter of absolute fact—whether it is the opinion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] or not—that the expenses of the Immigration Bureau can not be met by a per capita tax of $1.50. If the Senate is prepared to abandon the time-honored policy of the Government, which has been that the cost of the administration of this law should be defrayed from a fund collected from those benefited thereby, namely, the immigrants themselves, and if our own people are to have imposed upon them additional burdens in order to have this law executed, then I say let us continue the tax at $1.50; but if we are to adhere to that policy it must be made at least $3. Only this morning the Commissioner-General of Immigration and the commissioner of Ellis Island stated positively that the work of the bureau could not be continued at the present per capita tax.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would ask the Senator, with his permission, whether the tax is not now $1?

Mr. LODGE. It is $1 at present. The House of Representatives raised it to $1.50, and the Senate committee propose to make it $3.

Mr. PENROSE. If this bill should be enacted into law, the number of immigrant aliens admitted into the United States would be materially reduced, because that is the purpose of the legislation, and it is obvious that the immigration fund would be proportionately reduced. That reduction must be met, even if the fund is only to be kept at its present amount, by an increase in the tax. The Commissioner-General of Immigration does not rely upon theory or argument as to the future, but states positively that he will need for the running expenses of Ellis Island $315,000; that for the administration of the contract-labor laws he will require $150,000; that for the expenses relative to the Canadian border he will require $300,000; that for new buildings at Ellis Island $500,000 will be required; for new buildings at Boston, most urgently required, as the Senator from Massachusetts knows, $500,000 will be needed; for a ferryboat, $90,000; and for a tugboat, in connection with the Ellis Island station, $40,000—there are other items which I do not happen to have contained upon this memorandum which I hold in my hand—making an amount of $1,895,000 absolutely required to carry out the work of the bureau for the ensuing year.

Mr. President, the items which I have read do not include the expenses at Philadelphia, San Francisco, and other ports. The revenues from all sources to the immigration fund last year were some $912,000, hardly half of the amount requisite to carry on the work of the bureau for the ensuing year, particularly if by the reduction of the number of aliens admitted the amount received from the per capita tax is necessarily reduced.

Mr. Goodwin Brown, the counsel for the lunacy commission for the State of New York, testified before the Immigration Committee this morning that over 50 per cent of the insane in the State of New York were aliens coming in under the lax provisions of the present law, and that that great State is put to an expense of $5,000,000 annually to support the insane population of the State. What that amounts to throughout the country at large it is difficult to tell, but it is an enormous figure; and certainly the people of the United States are subjected to enormous burdens enough of a financial character in order to support the criminals, the insane, and those unfit to become part of our population without adding to the burden and requiring them to appropriate over $1,000,000 annually on the work of this immigration restriction.

There is another point which was not referred to by either of the Senators, members of the committee, who explained this increase, and that is, that in the opinion of the immigration officials this increase of the head tax to $3 will very largely tend to keep out the most objectionable and undesirable classes of immigrants; that the increase in the cost of their admission to the country will tend as a prohibition, and in that way work in harmony with the general purpose of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. After the word "every," in line 4 of section 1, I move to strike out the word "passenger" and insert "alien immigrant."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Now, the amendment which I heretofore offered will be unnecessary. I want it to read "and every alien immigrant not a citizen of the Dominion of Canada," striking out the words "of the United States," because the definition of "alien immigrant" makes any reference to the United States unnecessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, in section 1, line 5, after the words "of the," it is proposed to strike out the words "United States or of the;" so as to read "not a citizen of the Dominion of Canada."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. The next committee amendment is printed in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent to offer, for the purpose of having it printed, a proposed amendment to the first section of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be received, printed, and laid upon the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the first section of the bill by adding:

Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall be held to interfere with the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to examine alien immigrants at Canadian ports of entry instead of at border ports of the United States along the Canadian border.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and laid upon the table for the present. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, it is proposed to insert——

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw that amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 1, section 1, after the word "Mexico," at the end of line 6, to insert "or a bona fide resident of the said Dominion or Republics for one year continuously prior to application for admission;" so as to read:

Or a bona fide resident of said Dominion or Republics for one year continuously prior to application for admission who shall come by steam, sail, or other vessel from any foreign port to any port within the United States, or by any railway or any other mode of transportation, from foreign contiguous territory to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 1, line 14, after the word "vessel," to insert "or the property of the transportation line;" and in line 17, after the word "vessels," to insert "or transportation lines;" so as to read:

The duty imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessel or the property of the transportation line which shall bring such aliens to ports of the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessels or transportation lines, and the payment of such duty may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that that amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 1, line 19, after the word "remedy," to strike out:

And if any such alien seeking admission overland refuses or neglects to pay such duty as hereinbefore provided he shall be refused admission to the United States, and if found subsequently to have obtained admission thereto after such neglect or refusal, he shall be deemed and adjudged to be unlawfully therein and may be deported, as is provided hereinafter for the deportation of other aliens found unlawfully in the United States.

Mr. LODGE. In lieu of the words stricken out after the word "remedy," I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "remedy," in line 19, section 1, page 2, it is proposed to insert:

The head tax herein provided for shall not be levied upon aliens in transit through the United States, nor upon aliens who have once been admitted into the United States and have paid the head tax, who later shall go in transit from one port of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire the amendment striking out the words beginning in line 19 agreed to, and to have inserted in their place what has been read?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 3, section 1, line 4, before the word "transportation," to strike out "foreign," and in the same line, after the word "section," to strike out "thirty-three" and insert "thirty-four;" so as to read:

Provided, That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, by agreement with transportation lines, as provided in section 34 of this act, may arrange in some other manner for the payment of the duty imposed by this section upon, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, section 1, line 6, after the word "upon," to insert "railway or other transportation lines bringing."

Mr. LODGE. I ask that that amendment be disagreed to, to conform to the previous section.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 3, section 1, line 7, after the word "aliens," to strike out "seeking admission overland" and insert "from Canada, Mexico, or Cuba."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire simply to say that I am very much gratified to have adopted the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. I think it greatly removes the objections that some of us have had to the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 4, section 2, line 1, after the word "kind," to insert "skilled or unskilled;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: "All idiots, insane persons, epileptics, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; persons afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease; persons who have been convicted of a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of all government or of all forms of law, or the assassination of public officials; prostitutes, and persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women for the purpose of prostitution; persons whose migration to the United States has been induced by offers, solicitations, promises, or agreements, parole or special, express or implied, of labor or work, or service of any kind, skilled or unskilled, in the United States, and those who have been, within one year from the date of the application for admission to the United States, deported as being under offers, solicitations, promises, or agreements to perform labor or service of some kind therein; and also any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes; but this section shall not be held to prevent persons living in the United States from sending for a relative or friend who is not of the foregoing excluded classes, etc.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 2.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that section 3 and the substitute amendment offered by the committee be passed over. That is a section and amendment which will give rise to more or less discussion. My object to-day is simply to get through with the formal amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the section and the proposed amendment will be passed over for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 4.

Mr. LODGE. In line 10, page 8, section 4, I move to strike out "knowingly and willfully;" in line 12 I move to strike out the words "knowingly or willfully," and in line 14 I move to strike out the words "or contract or agreement." These are amendments requested by the Commissioner-General of Immigration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, page 8, section 4, it is proposed to strike out the words "knowingly and willfully;" in line 12 it is proposed to strike out the words "knowingly or willfully," and in line 14 it is proposed to strike out the words "or contract or agreement;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the importation into the United States of any woman for the purposes of prostitution is hereby forbidden; and whoever shall import or attempt to import any woman into the United States for the purposes of prostitution, or shall hold or attempt to hold any woman for such purposes in pursuance of such illegal importation, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned not less than one nor more than five years and pay a fine not exceeding $5,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 9, section 4, after the word "woman:" in line 11, after the word "woman," and in line 13, after the word "woman," I move to insert "or girl."

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in section 4, line 9, after the word "woman," to insert "or girl;" in line 11, after the word "woman," to insert "or girl," and in line 13, after the word "woman," to insert "or girl;" so as to read in each case "woman or girl."

The amendments were agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 5.

Mr. LODGE. In section 5, page 8, line 21, after the word "alien," I move to strike out "or aliens, any foreigner or foreigners;" in line 25, I move to strike out "or aliens, foreigner or foreigners."

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 9, section 5, line 1, after the word "kind," to insert "skilled or unskilled;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien into the United States in pursuance of any offer, solicitation, promise, or agreement, parole or special, expressed or implied, made previous to the importation of such alien to perform labor or service of any kind, skilled or unskilled, in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 6.

Mr. LODGE. In section 6, line 7, page 9, I move to strike out the words "or aliens, foreigner or foreigners;" in line 15, I move to strike out the words "or foreigner." It is mere surplusage. And in line 18, after the word "alien," I move to strike out "or foreigner."

The SECRETARY. In line 7, section 6, page 9, it is proposed to strike out "or aliens, foreigner or foreigners;" in line 15 to strike out the words "or foreigner;" and in line 18, after the word "alien," to strike out "or foreigner;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 5 of this act the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same, by knowingly assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien to the United States to perform labor or service of any kind by reason of any offer, solicitation, promise, or agreement, express or implied, parole or special, to or with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States, or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor in his own name and for his own benefit, including any such alien thus promised labor or service of any kind as aforesaid, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the courts of the United States; and separate suits may be brought for each alien thus promised labor or service of any kind as aforesaid. And it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such suit when brought by the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 7.

Mr. LODGE. In section 7, line 24, before the word "bring," I move to insert the word "willfully;" after the word "shall," in line 2, page 10, to insert "willfully;" and in line 9, to strike out the words "exceeding one year" and insert "less than three months nor more than two years."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 24, section 7, page 9, before the word "bring," it is proposed to insert the word "willfully;" in line 2, page 10, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert the word "willfully;" in line 9, after the word "not," it is proposed to strike out "exceeding one year" and insert "less than three months nor more than two years;" so as to read:

SEC. 7. That any person, including the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any vessel, who shall willfully bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise, or who shall willfully attempt, by himself or through another, to bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise, any alien not duly admitted by an immigrant inspector, or not lawfully entitled to enter the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 for each and every alien so landed or attempted to be landed, or by imprisonment for a term not less than three months nor more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 10, section 8, line 21, before the word "subject," to strike out "place" and insert "places;" so as to read:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to States or Territories, the District of Columbia, or places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States advertising the indudements they offer for immigration thereto, respectively.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 10.

Mr. LODGE. In the first line of section 10, page 11, before the word "transportation," I move to insert the words "person, including any;" so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Before the word "alien," in line 15, section 10, I move to insert "idiot or insane alien, or any;" in line 14, I move to strike out the words "any port within," so that it will simply read "to the United States;" and in line 21, after the word "such" where it occurs the second time, I move to insert "person or;" so as to read "such person or transportation company."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 10, line 2, page 12, I move to strike out the words "fine imposed upon it" and insert the word "sum;" and in line 3 I move to strike out the words "such fine" and insert "the same;" so as to read:

And no vessel shall be granted clearance papers while any such sum remains unpaid, nor shall the same be remitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts what is the effect of the language that such fine or sum shall not be remitted?

Mr. LODGE. It means that where the owner or consignee of a vessel has been found guilty of this offense and has been charged with this sum of money—for it is not strictly a fine—the vessel can not get clearance papers until the debt is paid. The Commissioner-General asked to have the language changed.

Mr. MALLORY. It is customary in such cases, I believe, to impose a penalty, which is called a fine, for a violation of the rule.

Mr. LODGE. Yes. I offered the amendment, I will say frankly, because the commissioners of immigration at all ports and the Commissioner-General asked the committee to make the change.

Mr. MALLORY. I think the language is pretty much the same now in the present law. But what I wanted to learn is whether this precludes a remission of the fine in any case; as, for instance, in the event that the President wished to remit it. It is a penalty, and he has the power to remit it.

Mr. LODGE. No; it certainly ought not to. There ought to be an opportunity to have it remitted on representation, I suppose, to the Secretary of the Treasury. I think there is an omission there. I will be very glad if the Senator from Florida will prepare an amendment to meet that view.

Mr. MALLORY. I would leave it out entirely if I were preparing an amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad the Senator has called my attention to it, for it seems to me there ought to be some method of making proper representation to the head of the Department if necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 12, section 11, line 10, after the word "person," to strike out "is" and insert "are."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 11, line 7, page 12, I move to strike out the words "a person" and insert "another alien;" in line 10, I move to strike out "person" and insert "alien;" and in line 11, I move to strike out the word "person" and insert "alien."

The SECRETARY. In line 7, section 11, page 12, it is proposed to strike out the words "a person" and insert the words "another alien;" in line 10, after the word "accompanying," to strike out the word "person" and insert "alien;" and in line 11 to strike out "person" and insert "alien;" so as to read:

SEC. 11. That upon the certificate of a medical officer of the United States Marine-Hospital Service to the effect that a rejected alien is helpless from sickness, physical disability, or infancy, if such alien is accompanied by another alien whose protection or guardianship is required by such rejected alien, the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel in which such alien and accompanying alien are brought shall be required to return said alien and accompanying alien in the same manner as vessels are required to return other rejected aliens.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 12, line 18, after the word "disease," to insert "or with any mental or physical disability which would bring such aliens within any of the classes excluded from admission to the United States under section 2 of this act;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. That the decision of the board of special inquiry, hereinafter provided for, based upon the certificate of the examining medical officer, shall be final as to the rejection of aliens afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease, or with any mental or physical disability which would bring such aliens within any of the classes excluded from admission to the United States under section 2 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 16 on page 13.

Mr. LODGE. In section 13, line 25, page 12, after the word "alien," I move to strike out the words "or aliens;" and in line 3, page 13, after the word "alien," I move to strike out the words "or aliens."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 7, section 13, page 13, I wish to transpose the words so as to have them read:

The nationality; the race; the last residence.

That is simply to make it conform to the existing manifests.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 13, section 13, page 13, I move to strike out the word "money" and insert "$50;" and in line 14 I move to strike out the word "so" and insert "less;" so as to read:

Whether in possession of $50, and if less, how much.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In the same section, line 14, after the word "relative," I move to insert "or friend;" in line 15, after the word "relative," I move to insert "or friend," and in the same line, before the word "address," I move to insert "complete;" so as to read:

Whether going to join a relative or friend, and if so, what relative or friend, and his name and complete address.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 13, section 13, line 17, after the word "almshouse," to insert "or an institution or hospital for the care and treatment of the insane;" so as to read:

Whether ever in prison or almshouse or an institution or hospital for the care and treatment of the insane or supported by charity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, section 16, line 19, after the word "alien," to strike out "qualified to enter the United States;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 16. That in the case of the failure of the master or commanding officer of any vessel to deliver to the said immigration officers lists or manifests of all aliens on board thereof, as required in sections 13, 14, and 15 of this act, there shall be paid to the collector of customs at the port of arrival the sum of $10 for each alien concerning whom the above information is not contained in any list as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 18, section 16, after the word "act," I move to strike out "there" and insert "he," and in the same line, after the word "shall," I move to strike out "be paid" and insert "pay;" so as to read "he shall pay."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 17.

Mr. LODGE. In section 17, line 13, page 16, after the word "shall," I move to insert the word "there;" so as to read:

Shall there take charge of such aliens.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 16 of the same section, after the word "detention," I move to insert the word "thereafter;" so as to read:

For their detention thereafter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 18.

Mr. LODGE. In section 18, line 2, page 17, I move to strike out the words "or aliens."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 22, section 19.

Mr. LODGE. In section 19, line 9, page 17, before the word "officers," I move to insert the word "owners;" in line 10 to strike out the words "or aliens;" in the same line, after the word "to," to strike out "any port of;"' in line 12, before the word "alien," to insert "such;" in line 13 to strike out "at the port of arrival;" in the same line, before the word "officer," to insert "owner," and in line 17 to strike out "at the port of arrival."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 19, page 17, it is proposed, in line 9, after the word "the," to insert the words "owners;" in line 10 to strike out the words "or aliens;" in the same line to strike out "any port of;" in line 12, before the word "alien," to insert "such;" in line 13 to strike out the words "at the port of arrival;" in line 14, before the word "officer," to insert "owner," and in line 17 to strike out "at the port of arrival;" so as to read:

SEC. 19. That it shall be the duty of the owners, officers, and agents of any vessel bringing an alien to the United States to adopt due precautions to prevent the landing of any such alien from such vessel at any time or place other than that designated by the immigration officers, and any such owner, officer, agent, or person in charge of such vessel who shall land or permit to land any alien at any time or place other than that designated by the immigration officers shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall on conviction be punished by a fine for each alien so permitted to land of not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, section 19, after the word "imprisonment," at the end of line 22, to insert "and every such alien so landed shall be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States and shall be deported, as provided by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 15, page 18.

Mr. LODGE. In section 20, line 9, after the word "thereof" I move to insert "or of any other vessel owned by the same interest;" so as to read:

And if any master, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee of any vessels shall refuse to receive back on board thereof, or of any other vessel owned by the same interest, such aliens, or shall neglect to detain them thereon, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 18, section 20, line 16, before the word "such," to strike out "any" and insert "no," and in the same line, after the word "shall," to strike out "not;" so as to read:

And shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not less than $300 for each and every such offense, and no such vessel shall have clearance from any port of the United States while any such fine is unpaid, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 20, page 18, line 22, after the word "alien," to strike out "or aliens," and in line 24, after the word "alien," to strike out "or aliens;" so as to read:

That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may suspend, upon conditions to be prescribed by the Commissioner-General, the deportation of any alien found to have come under promise or agreement of labor or service of any kind if, in his judgment, the testimony of such alien is necessary on behalf of the United States Government in the prosecution of offenders against the provisions of sections 5 and 6 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 16, page 19.

Mr. LODGE. In line 15, section 21, after the word "transportation," I move to strike out the words "to the port of deportation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 23, page 21, line 8, after the word "aid," to strike out the period and the word "All" and insert a semicolon and the word "all;" so as to read:

And shall have authority to enter into contracts for the support and relief of such aliens as may fall into distress or need public aid; all under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 6, section 25, after the date "1883," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter the mode of appointing commissioners of immigration at the several ports of the United States as provided by the sundry civil appropriation bill approved August 18, 1894.

Mr. LODGE. I move to amend the amendment by inserting at the end the words "or the official status of such commissioners heretofore appointed."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In line 9, the words "appropriation bill" should read "appropriation act."

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it should read "sundry civil appropriation act." I move to strike out "bill" and insert "act" in line 9.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. After the word "testimony," in line 14, page 22, I move to strike out the period and to insert:

and any person to whom such an oath has been administered under the provisions of this act who shall knowingly or wilfully give false testimony or swear to any false statement in any way affecting or in relation to the right of an alien to admission to the United States shall be deemed guilty of perjury and be punished as provided by section 5392, United States Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 22, line 18, section 25, before the word "board," to strike out "the" and insert "a;" so as to read:

and such challenge shall operate to take the alien whose right to land is so challenged before a board of special inquiry for its investigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I now offer a substitute for section 26, which is a pure administrative section and which the Department of the Treasury wishes somewhat changed. I offer a section in the nature of a substitute. It comprises mere matters of detail and covers the whole section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator propose to strike out the entire section or the proposed amendment to it and insert?

Mr. LODGE. I move to insert what I send to the desk as a substitute for the entire section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 26. Such boards of special inquiry shall be appointed by the commissioners of immigration at the various ports of arrival as may be necessary for the prompt determination of all cases of aliens detained at such ports under the provisions of law. Such boards shall consist of three members, who shall be selected from such of the immigrant officials in the service as the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall from time to time designate as qualified to serve on such boards: Provided, That at ports where there are fewer than three immigrant inspectors the Secretary of the Treasury, upon recommendation of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, may designate other United States officials for service on such boards of special inquiry. Such boards shall have authority to determine whether an alien who has been duly held shall be allowed to land or be deported, and in all cases the burden shall be on the alien to show clearly and beyond a doubt that he is entitled to land. All hearings before boards shall be separate and apart from the public; but the said boards shall keep complete permanent records of their proceedings and of all such testimony as may be produced before them; and the decision of any two members of a board shall prevail and be final, but either the alien or any dissenting member of said board may appeal through the commissioner of immigration at the port of arrival and the Commissioner-General of Immigration to the Secretary of the Treasury, whose decision shall then be final; and the taking of such appeal shall operate to stay any action in regard to the final disposal of the alien whose case is so appealed until the receipt by the commissioner of immigration at the port of arrival of such decision: Provided, That nothing in this section or in this act shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from arranging from time to time, and it shall be his duty so to arrange, in accordance with existing contracts with railroad and steamship lines in foreign contiguous territory, or in accordance with such contracts as he may enter into in the future with such or other transportation lines, for the examination and payment of head tax of aliens landing in ports in said foreign contiguous territory and destined for the United States, such examination to be held at such ports or places in said foreign contiguous territory as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate. Such examination shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, dispense with the necessity for further examination at United States border ports under this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed as a substitute for section 26.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 31, page 25, line 14.

Mr. LODGE. On page 25, at the end of section 31, line 14, I move to insert, "And provided further"—the typewritten section which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. Insert at the end of line 14, page 21, the following:

And provided further, That all receipts accruing from the disposal of such exclusive privileges as herein provided shall be paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of the immigrant fund provided for in section 1 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the entire section 32 be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that a committee amendment?

Mr. LODGE. That is a committee amendment. I sent my copy of the bill to the desk. That is the reason why I lost the run of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 32, in the following words:

SEC. 32. That all steamship and transportation companies and other owners of vessels regularly engaged in transporting aliens to the United States shall twice a year file a certificate with the Secretary of the Treasury that they have furnished, to be kept conspicuously exposed to view in the office of each of their agents in foreign countries authorized to sell emigrant tickets, a copy of this law and of all subsequent laws of this country relative to immigration, printed in large letters in the language of the country where a copy of the law is to be exposed to view, and that they have instructed their agents to call the attention thereto of all persons contemplating emigration before selling tickets to them; and in case of the failure for sixty days of any such company or any such owners to file such a certificate, or in case they file a false certificate, they shall pay a fine of not exceeding $500, to be recovered in the proper United States court; and said fine shall also be a lien upon any vessel of said company or owners found within the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he will permit me to make a request.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are on the Calendar of the Senate a considerable number of pension bills that came over from the last session, and a great many Senators and Members of the other House have suggested that they would like to have them passed. I ask consent that at the conclusion of the consideration of the immigration bill for to-day, which is evidently going to occur in a few minutes, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. PENROSE. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire how long a time he expects to consume with the consideration of the pension bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think half an hour, possibly.

Mr. PENROSE. After that we can have an executive session, I suppose. There are a large number of nominations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; it will not take very long.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like, now, to make a suggestion here. It is that the immigration bill may be reprinted with the committee amendments.

Mr. LODGE. I was going to make that request in one moment. I wanted to finish the reading of the bill, so that we could get a reprint. I think we have covered everything that the committee had to present. I believe the next committee amendment is at the top of page 27.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has consent been given to my request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that on the completion of the reading of the pending bill the unobjected pension cases may receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 34, page 27, line 5.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 34, page 27, line 2, after the word "transportation," to strike out "company" and insert "line;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That any such transportation line shall agree, as far as practicable, to assume all the obligations imposed by this act on the masters, agents, and owners of vessels bringing aliens to ports of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 10, to strike out section 36, in the following words:

SEC. 36. That no intoxicating liquors of any character shall be sold within the limits of the Capitol building of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that that amendment be passed over, as a Senator not now present requested me to allow it to be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PENROSE in the chair). Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. LODGE. I refer to section 36 as it stood originally in the bill. The committee reported that it be stricken out. To the new section 36 I offer an amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire if it is understood that section 36, commencing in line 11 and ending in line 13, is not to be acted upon now?

Mr. LODGE. It is so understood. It is to be passed over. I was requested by a Senator on the other side of the Chamber to pass it over. He is not here at this time.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 27, after line 13, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 36. That the deportation of aliens, provided for in this act, shall be to the trans-Atlantic or trans-Pacific ports from which said aliens embarked for the United States; or, if such embarkation was for foreign contiguous territory, to the foreign port at which said aliens embarked for such territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, after the word "aliens," in line 14, insert "arrested within the United States after entry and found to be illegally therein;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 36. That the deportation of aliens arrested within the United States after entry and found to be illegally therein, provided for in this act, shall be to the trans-Atlantic or trans-Pacific ports from which said aliens embarked for the United States; or, if such embarkation was for foreign contiguous territory, to the foreign port at which said aliens embarked for such territory.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 24, section 37, after the word "Chinese," to insert "persons;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 37. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to repeal, nor in any wise interfere with the administration of, laws relating to the immigration, or exclusion, of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, section 38, line 25, after the word "effect," to strike out "at the end of sixty days from and after its passage" and insert "October 1, 1902;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 38. That this act shall take effect October 1, 1902.

Mr. LODGE. I think section 38 had better be stricken out. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Now, I wish to ask for the renumbering of certain sections before we come to the reprinting.

Mr. CLAY. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that we have not yet disposed of section 37.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that has been disposed of.

Mr. CLAY. There is an amendment pending in the committee to section 37. I think the amendment was offered after the Senator left the committee this morning; and there is also an amendment pending to section 3.

Mr. LODGE. There are a number of amendments pending to section 3; I have some myself. But we have adopted now all the committee amendments. I thought it would be a convenience to the Senate to have the bill printed as amended by the committee, and of course it is now open to amendment on the motion of anyone.

Mr. CLAY. I know that there is an amendment pending to section 37; and it was practically agreed to after the Senator left the committee room this morning.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; I did not observe it. As proposed to be amended the proviso to section 37 will read:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. CLAY. That is the Chinese legislation?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I think there is an amendment pending to section 3.

Mr. LODGE. That section we passed over.

Mr. CLAY. Very well; that is all right.

Mr. LODGE. I omitted this amendment: In line 22, page 27, after the word "repeal," I move to strike out "nor in any wise interfere with the administration of" and to insert "alter, or amend existing."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment to section 37, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 37, line 22, after the word "repeal," strike out "nor in any wise interfere with the administration of" and insert in lieu "alter, or amend existing;" so as to make the section read:

That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Now, before requesting a reprint, I ask that section 7 as it stands in the bill may be numbered section 9; that section 8 be numbered section 7, and that section 9 be numbered section 8.

The SECRETARY. Transpose the sections so that section 7 will be section 9, section 8 will be section 7, and section 9 will be section 8.

Mr. LODGE. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The sections will be so numbered, in the absence of objection.

Mr. LODGE. Now, I ask——

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me ask him a question? In section 12 I understood there was to be no change. I may have misunderstood the committee. It provides:

That the decision of the board of special inquiry, hereinafter provided for, based upon the certificate of the examining medical officer, shall be final as to the rejection of aliens afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease, or with any mental or physical disability which would bring such aliens within any of the classes excluded from admission to the United States under section 2 of this act.

I understood that the law was to stand as it is now, and that there could be an appeal from this special board to the Secretary of the Treasury in the event that there was dissatisfaction with their decision.

Mr. LODGE. That must have been after I left the committee room. No such amendment was handed to me by the chairman.

Mr. CLAY. This section, though, seems to refer to a special class set forth in section 2. The law as it stands now allows the immigrant, if he is dissatisfied with the decision of the special board, to appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LODGE. It leaves the decision final with the Immigration Bureau.

Mr. CLAY. This section makes final the decision of the special commission who make the examination and does away with the appeal. I will ask the Senator if he thinks that is a wise policy?

Mr. LODGE. It is limited only, as the Senator will notice, to cases involving diseases, either physical or mental. The appeal remains as to everything else.

Mr. CLAY. The bill reads, "or with a dangerous contagious disease, or with any mental or physical disability."

Mr. LODGE. Exactly. That is, the decision shall be final only when they are the matters passed upon by the medical board.

Mr. CLAY. Then section 12 does not change the general law except as to those classes?

Mr. LODGE. That is all.

I move that sections 11 and 12 be transposed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Now I move that the bill as it has been amended by the Senate be reprinted for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the bill as amended and the sections passed over shall be reprinted.

Mr. LODGE. Reprinted as they now are.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I would suggest that a thousand copies of the bill be printed. I am informed at the Secretary's desk that only some 200 copies of the House bill was printed, and that certainly will not meet the demand for the reprint of this bill from all over the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Six hundred and twenty-five is the usual number printed.

Mr. PENROSE. But some are for the use of the House and some for the use of the Senate. I ask for a reprint of a thousand copies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from New Hampshire simply asks that the immigration bill, so called, be temporarily laid aside. Now it is in the position of unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly. That was my purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The private pension bills will now be considered in their order on the Calendar.

MARTHA A. HOLLINGSEAD.

The bill (H. R. 5883) granting a pension to Martha A. Hollingsead was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Martha A. Hollingsead, widow of Joseph Hollingsead, late of Company A, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HANNAH E. JAMES.

The bill (S. 5019) granting an increase of pension to Hannah E. James was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in line 8 before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty," and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah E. James, widow of Charles C. James, late of Company K, Thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES W. POOR.

The bill (H. R. 3653) granting an increase of pension to James W. Poor was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of James W. Poor, late of Company B, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEON KING.

The bill (H. R. 8856) granting an increase of pension to Leon King was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Leon King, late of Company G, Twenty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE BAKER.

The bill (H. R. 12009) granting an increase of pension to George Baker was considerd as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of George Baker, late of Company K, Twenty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN G. HEISER.

The bill (H. R. 13646) granting an increase of pension to John G. Heiser was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John G. Heiser, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLOTTE E. BAIRD.

The bill (H. R. 10679) granting an increase of pension to Charlotte E. Baird was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Charlotte E. Baird, widow of George Baird, late first lieutenant Company K, Fourth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $17 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN LUDWIG.

The bill (H. R. 1931) granting an increase of pension to John Ludwig was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John Ludwig, late of Company A, Ninth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 8, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, infinite source of life and light and love, sensible of our dependence upon Thee and conscious of our daily needs, we humbly and reverently bow in Thy presence that by the uplift of the moment our minds may be illumined and our hearts quickened that we may be prepared for the duties and the obligations of the hour. Mindful of the great souls whom from time to time Thou hast raised up as leaders among men and who have breathed their spirits into the institutions of our country, we bless Thee and pray that we may strive to emulate their virtues. Profoundly moved by the sudden and unexpected death of one who for years was a conspicuous and dominant spirit upon the floor of this House, and who presided with dignity and force over its deliberations, we pray that his influence for good may be potent to coming generations. And now, O Heavenly Father, comfort a mourning people and the bereaved family with the bright promises of the gospel of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries.

AMERICAN RAILROAD COMPANY OF PORTO RICO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message, in writing, from the President of the United States; which was ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Referring to section 32 of the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith an ordinance approved by me October 27, 1902, granting the consent of the executive council of Porto Rico to the assignment by the Compania de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico to Henry De Ford, his heirs, executors and assigns, and to a proposed corporation to be designated and known as "The American Railroad Company of Porto Rico, Central Aguirre Operator," of the right to construct, operate, and maintain the railroad lines from Ponce to Guayama, authorized by the executive council of Porto Rico on October 28, 1901, and to construct and operate a branch line from Ponce to the Ponce Playa, and a branch line from Guayama to Arroyo.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, December 8, 1902.

ACCOUNTS OF LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State covering a statement showing the receipts and disbursements of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company for the months of May, June, July, August, September, and October, 1902, furnished by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission, in pursuance of section 11 of the "Act to provide for celebrating the one-hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory," etc., approved March 3, 1901.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, December 8, 1902.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

Mr. LONG, indefinitely, on account of important business.

Mr. ALLEN of Maine, for four days, to accompany the remains of ex-Speaker Reed to his old home in Portland, Me.

Mr. TALBERT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. CURTIS, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the special order fixed by the House on Saturday last for to-day be made the special order for to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] asks unanimous consent that the special order, known as the London dock bill, which was set for to-day be continued and made the special order for to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

DEATH OF HON. THOMAS B. REED.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the life of ex-Speaker Reed ended yesterday. Its span measured many years less than the allotted life of man, and yet there was within it so much of moment that his fame became great, and will be lasting. He was a citizen of my State since his retirement from public life, although it was as a Representative from the State of Maine that he rendered his service to the public; and it is in the State of Maine that he will have his final resting place.

To have served with Mr. Reed was an honor; to have been in close touch with him, an inspiration; to have enjoyed his confidence and his friendship, a delight. He was so great, his service to his country so valuable, that it seems to me we may fitly depart from what is the usual custom of the House when one not in public life dies. I therefore, Mr. Speaker, offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following minute be spread upon the record of the House of Representatives:

Hon. Thomas Brackett Reed died in Washington, December 7, 1902. For twenty-two years he had been a member of this House; for six years its Speaker. His service terminated with the Fifty-fifth Congress. Within this Chamber the scene of his life's great activities was laid. Here he rendered services to his country which placed him in the front rank of American statesmanship. Here he exhibited characteristics which compelled respect and won admiration. Forceful ability, intrinsic worth, strength of character brought him popular fame and Congressional leadership. In him depth and breadth of intellect, with a full and well-rounded development, had produced a giant who towered above his fellows and impressed them with his power and his wisdom. A distinguished statesman, a lofty patriot, a cultured scholar, an incisive writer, a unique orator, an unmatched debater, a master of logic, wit, satire, the most famous of the world's parliamentarians, the great and representative citizen of the American Republic has gone into history.

Resolved, That in honor of the distinguished dead the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of these resolutions? [A pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question being taken, the resolutions were adopted; and then, in accordance therewith, the House (at 12.15 p. m.) adjourned.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 215) regulating the duties and fixing the compensation of the customs inspectors at the port of New York.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR WILLIAM J. SEWELL.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Wednesday, the 17th of December, at some convenient hour, I shall submit resolutions in regard to the death of my late colleague, WILLIAM J. SEWELL, in order that appropriate tribute may be paid to his memory. Circumstances have been such that I have heretofore been unable to present the resolutions.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition, which will be read:

The telegram was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

[Telegram.]

GUTHRIE, OKLA., December 8, 1902.

Hon. PRESIDENT OF SENATE, Washington, D. C.:

Commercial Club and citizens generally mass meeting to-day earnestly and unanimously urge passage omnibus statehood bill. Single statehood advocates agree conditions not ripe for Beveridge bill.

K. E. BALL,
Mayor.
C. M. BARNES,
President Commercial Club.
FRANK B. LUCAS,
Secretary.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Kentucky, praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the internal-revenue laws relative to a reduction of the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BURTON. I present resolutions unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Commercial Club of Kansas City, November 25, 1902, which I ask may be read and lie on the table, the bill on this subject having already been reported from the Committee on Territories.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolutions unanimously adopted at the meeting of the Commercial Club of Kansas City, November 25, 1902.

Resolved, That the Commercial Club of Kansas City is in favor of the admission to statehood of Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arizona, and Indian Territory as soon as practicable.

We believe that the rapid growth in population, the increase in wealth and commercial importance, and the energy and patriotism of the people of those Territories will make their admission as States beneficial to the country at large as well as to the Territories themselves. We believe that the time has come when Congress should speedily provide that all the Territories upon the continent, except the District of Columbia and Alaska, should be organized as States, and thus be given equal rights and equal opportunities.

Resolved further, That the secretary be requested to send a copy of these resolutions to the United States Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from Missouri and Kansas.

Attest: E. M. CLENDENING,
Secretary.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Citizens' Northwest Suburban Association of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation providing that current revenues be applied only to current expenditures, and that extraordinary public improvements made necessary for the development of the future and greater Washington be paid for out of advances from the Treasury of the United States, to be reimbursed by annual installments from District revenues; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington presented the petition of R. I. Elliott, of Tacoma, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation to amend section 4921 of the Revised Statutes, relating to patents; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. WETMORE presented petitions of Prescott Post, No. 1, of Providence; of Ballou Post, No. 3, of Central Falls; of Arnold Post, No. 4, of Providence; of Reno Post, No. 6, of East Greenwich; of Farragut Post, No. 8, of Riverside; of Smith Post, No. 9, of Woonsocket; of Slocum Post, No. 10, of Providence; of Thomas Post, No. 11, of Appenang; of Rodman Post, No. 12, of Providence; of Eves Post, No. 13, of Providence; of Charles C. Baker Post, No. 16, of Wickford; of Tower Post, No. 17, of Pawtucket; of Budlong Post, No. 18, of Westerly; of J. C. Nichols Post, No. 19, of Rockland; of Bucklin Post, No. 20, of East Providence; of Gen. G. K. Warren Post, No. 21, of Newport; of R. F. Tobin Post, No. 24, of Warren, and of George H. Browns Post, No. 25, of Providence, Department of Rhode Island, Grand Army of the Republic, in the State of Rhode Island, praying that an appropriation be made for the erection of a suitable statue of General Burnside in one of the public parks in the city of Washington, D. C.; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. MASON presented a petition of the congregation of the Parks Chapel Methodist Episcopal Church, of Urbana, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate immigration and to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in United States Government stations and buildings; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Urbana, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Urbana, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in United States immigrant stations; which was ordred to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the internal-revenue laws relative to a reduction of the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

ESTATE OF LEO L. JOHNSTON.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I present papers to accompany the bill (S. 2666) for the relief of the estate of Leo L. Johnston, deceased. I move that the papers be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Claims for the use of that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS FOR RENT AND USE OF PROPERTY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that letters from the Quartermaster-General, United States Army, and from the Auditor for the War Department, relative to claims for the use and rent of property during the civil war, be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington (for Mr. TURNER), from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5953) granting a pension to Ann M. Green; and

A bill (S. 5508) granting an increase of pension to George J. Cheney.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington (for Mr. TURNER), from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4023) granting an increase of pension to Alman J. Houston; and

A bill (H. R. 5321) granting a pension to Lillie May Fifield.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5909) for the extension of Euclid avenue, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

DANIEL L. MALLICOAT.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4262) granting a pension to Daniel L. Mallicoat, and then that the bill be indefinitely postponed, as a House bill has already been enacted into a law for the same purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

FRANK SMITH.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the same order be made in regard to the bill (S. 882) granting an increase of pension to Frank Smith, on the ground that the pensioner has died since these proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 882. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming introduced a bill (S. 6487) relating to crimes against Indians, wards of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 139) to authorize Lieutenants Jackson, Rhett, Poole, and Chapin, Gen. H. V. N. Boynton, and Hon. H. Clay Evans to accept, respectively, a photograph of His Royal Highness Prince Henry of Prussia, tendered to each of them by the Prince; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 140) to authorize Capt. Richardson Clover, United States Navy, to accept a souvenir coronation medal tendered to him by the King of Great Britain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 141) to authorize Capt. Dorr F. Tozier to accept a sword from the King of Great Britain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ANTHRACITE COAL STRIKE COMMISSION.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill (H. R. 15372) to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners, reported yesterday from the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that the amendment lie on the table and be printed. I understand from the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that the bill will go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

JOHN KENNEDY.

On motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, it was Ordered, That John Kennedy have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report thereon

EMMA I. GRAVES.

Mr. KEARNS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Emma I. Graves, mother of George G. Graves, late a clerk in the office of the Secretary of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE SENATOR JAMES M'MILLAN.

Mr. BURROWS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate in arranging for and attending the funeral of the late Senator from Michigan, Hon. James McMillan, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

ARTHRACITE COAL STRIKE COMMISSION.

Mr. ALLISON. Yesterday I gave notice that I would request the Senate this morning to consider House bill 15372, making an appropriation for the Anthracite Coal Commission, so called, but to suit the convenience of the Senators, I will ask that the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MASON. I could not hear the request of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I make no request, except to give notice that to-morrow morning, instead of this morning, I will ask the Senate to consider the Anthracite Coal Commission bill.

THE HAGUE CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In response to the Senate resolution of the 4th instant, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State forwarding the report of the agent of the United States in the case of the United States v. Mexico before the Permanent Court of Arbitration under The Hague Convention.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, December 9, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] asks that 200 extra copies be printed for the use of the State Department. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

ANNUAL REPORT OF GOVERNOR OF PORTO RICO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State accompanying the second annual report of the governor of Porto Rico, and indorse the suggestion that the interest attaching to it may warrant its being printed for the use of Congress.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 9, 1902.

BRITISH SCHOONER LILLIE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the determination of Congress as to whether relief should not be afforded to the owners of the British schooner Lillie, a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, showing that the vessel sustained damages by a fire which broke out within her while she was being disinfected with sulphur and while she was in charge of the United States quarantine officer at Ship Island, near Biloxi, Miss.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 9, 1902.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 15345, being the militia organization bill, be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be read,

Mr. QUAY. I will object for the moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the fact that to-morrow, as a special order, the bill for the admission of the Territories of Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona comes before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. At 2 o'clock.

Mr. QUAY. Is it the intention of the Senator from Iowa to interfere with the special order on that day?

Mr. ALLISON. In no respect, Mr. President. I think the statehood bill comes up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. QUAY. It does.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill will come up at 2 o'clock, and there can be no interference with it, because it comes up as the unfinished business.

Mr. QUAY. But the bill the Senator from Iowa has in charge is an appropriation measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will not interfere with the statehood bill, unless by a majority vote of the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. Then I withdraw my objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15345) to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the present militia law is 110 years old, having been passed in 1792. It is substantially obsolete, ridiculously so in some respects. Nearly every President since its adoption has recommended further legislation. Washington in six annual messages and Jefferson in six made such recommendations. I will read an extract from one of Jefferson's recommendations, which states the question tersely in three lines. In 1805 he said:

I can not, then, but earnestly recommend to your early consideration the expediency of so modifying our militia system as, by a separation of the more active part from that which is less so, we may draw from it, when necessary, an efficient corps for real and active service.

That is just what this measure proposes to do. The old law makes every able-bodied man in the country a member of the militia, and provides no further organization. This bill separates and makes a class which can be called into active service.

The bill, I think, was very carefully considered in the other House, and in the House report it is stated that it was unanimously recommended by the committee. It was passed with substantial unanimity.

At a convention of the adjutants-general of the United States, which was very fully attended, this matter was the special subject of consideration and was gone over very carefully, and this bill was, as I understand, unanimously recommended by them.

For a brief statement of what is proposed by the bill I can not do better than ask the Secretary to read the extract from the last report of Secretary Root which I have marked, commencing on the second page of the committee's report. I make my statement as brief as possible, in order to save time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The bill which has now passed the House is the result of extensive and painstaking conference among representatives of all the classes of citizens especially interested in the subject and especially qualified to express opinions upon it. It does not represent fully anyone's view, but it contains many important provisions upon which a general agreement has been reached, and it will, I am sure, if enacted, be a great step in advance toward effective preparation for war otherwise than by the maintenance of a standing army.

The fundamental idea of the bill is to recognize the value to the National Government of the National Guard, which is capable of being utilized, first, as active militia when called out by the President for the specific purposes enumerated in the Constitution; second, as an already organized volunteer force when its organizations respond as such to calls for volunteers for general military purposes under authority of Congress, and, third, as the great school of the volunteer soldier, the benefits of which are received by the country when the members of the guard respond individually to calls for volunteers. The bill undertakes to regulate and provide for these various relations of the National Guard and its members to the general system; to conform the organization, armament, and discipline of the guard to that of the Regular and Volunteer armies of the United States; to establish closer relations and better cooperation between the National Guard and the Regular Army; to promote the efficiency and dignity of the guard as a part of the military system of the United States.

To aid in accomplishing these objects and in recognition of the benefits to the General Government that come from the guard altogether outside of its service to the individual States, the bill provides that the General Government shall furnish to the guard the same arms which it furnishes to the Regular Army, and for the voluntary participation by the guard with the Regular Army in maneuvers and field exercises for brief periods in each year. The bill also contains provisions making the National guard organizations which choose voluntarily to go beyond the limitations of militia service in effect a First Volunteer Reserve, and further provisions for the enrollment of a Second Volunteer Reserve not exceeding 100,000, to be composed of trained men who have served in the National Guard or in the Regular Army or the volunteer armies of the United States. These would constitute the first volunteer regiments after the National Guard Volunteers under any call by Congress. It also provides for ascertaining by practical tests, in advance of a call for volunteers, the fitness of members of the National Guard, graduates of the military schools and colleges, and other citizens with military training, to hold volunteer commissions, thus constituting an eligible list from which in case of a call for volunteers the officers of the Second Reserve must be taken, and the officers of the general body of volunteers may be taken. With the system provided for by the bill carried into effect we should be able while maintaining a standing army of but 60,000 men to put a force of at least 250,000 well-trained men into the field instantly upon a declaration of war, and the cost would be less than to maintain but a few additional regiments of regular troops.

The military force of the United States would then be as follows:

First. The Regular Army, capable of enlargement by the President, when he sees war coming, to 100,000.

Second. Such of the organized militia (already trained as a national guard and just as valuable, when used in the manner hereinafter indicated, as any other troops) as the President shall see fit to call into the service of the United States for not exceeding nine months, to repel invasion.

Third. A First Volunteer Reserve, composed of such companies, troops, and regiments of the organized militia already trained as a national guard as volunteer by organizations with all their officers and men.

Fourth. A Second Volunteer Reserve, composed of men previously enrolled and having previous military training in the National Guard, the Regular Army, or the Volunteer Army, and commanded by officers whose fitness has been previously ascertained by practical tests under the provisions of the militia act.

Fifth. Such further volunteers as it may be necessary to call forth from the States, according to their respective quotas, and commanded by regimental officers appointed by the governors of the States.

A conservative estimate of the number which would be included in the first four classes of troops, who have already had military service and will be available for immediate action, is from 250,000 to 300,000.

The number of the fifth class—volunteers who may or may not have had previous service—has no limit, except the possibilities of transportation and supply.

The capacity of the National Guard organizations in general to serve effectively as organizations, either militia or volunteer, in the National Army in case of war depends very largely upon the aid which they receive from the National Government. The guard is now armed with a variety of weapons of different kinds and calibers, including two different calibers of the obsolete Springfield rifle, the Lee, the Remington-Lee, the Winchester, and the Krag-Jörgensen. In several instances different National Guard organizations of the same State are armed with different weapons of different calibers. Among all the 115,000 National Guardsmen of the different States and Territories only about 4,000 have the modern service rifle of the United States Army. With the exception of these 4,000 rifles, the arms of the guard would be practically worthless in time of war, not merely because they are inferior, but because the guard would have to look to the United States Government for their ammunition, and the Government will have no ammunition for the kind of rifles they carry; they would have to look to the Government to replace the arms lost or broken in service, and the Government will be unable to supply the same kind. The militia and the volunteer National Guard organizations in general would therefore be obliged to throw away their present arms at the beginning of a war and get reequipped with weapons the use of which they have never learned.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I have no desire to hasten action unduly upon this measure, but there are special reasons why it should be acted on, if possible, before the holidays. It is probable that if adopted nearly every State, probably every one that has a militia establishment, will modify its laws somewhat to conform to this enactment. It, therefore, is very desirable that the bill shall be acted on before the meeting of the State legislatures. It relieves the States from some of the expense to which they have been subjected. Heretofore the States have had their proportionate allowance out of the appropriation of $1,000,000 annually, whether they took it in arms or equipments. Under this measure the National Government furnishes the rifles without charging it to that appropriation, leaving that appropriation entire for the use of the States for other materials.

I thought it important to bring the matter up and to have the bill read; and if anything is required in the way of perfecting it by any amendments to be offered I had hoped they might be so offered. I should be very glad, indeed, if action could be taken on the bill, but, as I said, I do not wish to hurry it.

Mr. CULLOM. I was not in when the bill was taken up, and I desire to inquire whether any amendments to the bill have been reported by the committee?

Mr. PROCTOR. None whatever.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill, then, has been reported as it came from the other House?

Mr. PROCTOR. It has been reported precisely as it passed the House.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to say but a word. I have had many letters urging attention to this bill and asking that it be passed. My judgment is that it ought to be passed. I shall favor it, and I hope that the Senator from Vermont will press it to a conclusion at once if he can.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I simply wish to suggest that I was not aware that this bill was to be called up when unanimous consent was asked. Knowing that there were some objections to it on the part of certain Senators, two or three of whom had spoken to me of their desire to investigate the subject and look into it more fully, I should have asked that it be postponed to accommodate them, but the Senate having acted with unanimity upon it, I shall make no objection.

I desire to say, however, that it is a bill of very grave importance, that there is some objection to it, and that some amendments, in my opinion, are required. I do not think, therefore, that it ought to be now pushed. The bill came from the Committee on Military Affairs on Thursday of last week, and now, only a day or two after, it is called up for passage. Three Senators have spoken to me about it. They not having read it and not knowing what it is, came to me, as a member of the committee, to ascertain certain facts about it.

As I have said, I do not think the bill ought to be now pushed by the Senator in charge of it, but that we ought to have some time to look into it and examine it, as it affects the rights both of States and of citizens.

I do not ask for its postponement, but I should be glad to have it deferred until some suitable time when the Senators who have spoken to me, as a member of the committee, may have had an opportunity to look into the matter and determine what they will do.

Mr. PROCTOR. As I said, Mr. President, I certainly have no desire to unduly hasten the consideration of the bill. The Senator from Tennessee will bear in mind that on last Thursday when I reported the bill I gave notice that it was my purpose to call it up at the earliest day possible; I hoped early this week. It was strictly in accordance with that notice that I called up the bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am gratified to hear of the disposition of the Senator from Vermont to give an opportunity to Senators to examine the bill. I did not hear the announcement which he made or I certainly should have endeavored in the time which has intervened to have at least read the bill. I quite agree with the Senator from Vermont that the bill ought to be acted upon if possible before the holidays, and I shall, so far as I am concerned, endeavor to cooperate with him in accomplishing that end.

I am in thorough sympathy with what I understand to be the purpose of the bill. I think it is of the utmost importance that the militia of the country should be so organized and so perfected as to justify what must be the main reliance of the country upon it for its defense, and also with a view to make unnecessary a large standing army. At the same time, as suggested by the Senator from Tennessee, it is a matter of very grave importance and nearly touches the people of every State. For that reason I am gratified by the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont that there will be no vote taken on the bill to-day.

I do not know whether there is anything in the bill to which I shall object. Certainly I shall make no capricious objection, and I trust that there may be no reason for any amendment whatever. If there is none of a vital character, I certainly shall not endeavor to offer any amendment which might not in my opinion be absolutely necessary. I had communicated to some Senators privately my objection to the present consideration of the bill, and I simply take advantage of this opportunity to indicate further that while I do have this objection to its present consideration it is not due to any hostility of the bill, but merely to a desire that a matter which is so closely of concern to the people of my State, as well as to the people of every other State, shall be put in a position where we can all have the opportunity to at least examine it carefully before being called upon to vote on it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think the request by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, that this bill have early consideration, is a very reasonable one, because the legislatures in a large number of States, in fact, in most of them, meet either on the first or second Tuesday in January. The legislative term is limited in many of the States. In some States the constitutional limit is forty days, so that the legislative bodies will adjourn in February in a number of States. If the bill is to be amended, then there would be all the more necessity, in my judgment, to complete consideration and final action before the holiday adjournment. I trust that those who feel a particular interest in this bill—and I assume that all Senators do—will give the bill early and careful consideration, in order that the Senator from Vermont in charge of the bill can call it up some day this week and have it finally disposed of before we adjourn for the holidays.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I understand that in a majority of the States the men who take an interest in military matters, and who are a part of the National Guard, so called, have had this bill under consideration for a year, and have thrashed it over thoroughly; and, furthermore, that they are almost unanimous in the recommendation of its passage. I have been told that there was only one adjutant-general in the United States who offered any objection to the bill, and that was a very slight one.

I think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] makes a very important suggestion when he says that we should act on the bill in time to get it before the legislatures of the different States so that they may enact laws to put the act into operation in a proper and forceful manner.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from West Virginia permit me to inquire of him whether a copy of the bill has been furnished to the adjutant-general of each State?

Mr. SCOTT. It has.

Mr. BATE. When?

Mr. SCOTT. It was before them at their meeting; and, as I understand it, this is really a bill that was perfected by them and submitted to the House. I will ask the Senator from Vermont if that is not correct?

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes.

Mr. BATE. I presume, Mr. President, that the bill in its present shape has not had time to go to the adjutants-general of the States. They certainly ought to have an opportunity to see it as it is now.

Mr. SCOTT. It passed the House on the 30th of June, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. BATE. Yes; but the action of the Senate committee was had only last week. It was reported last Thursday morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, if the Secretary will please turn to section 7 of the bill, I want to offer an amendment there in order that it may be printed with the bill when it is laid aside.

In section 7, page 4, after the word "militia," in line 18, I move to insert "who shall be;" in the same line, after the word "called," to insert "forth;" after the word "forth," so inserted, to strike out "into the service of the United States;" in line 19, after the word "prescribed," to strike out "shall be held to be in such service from the date of the publication of such call" and insert "and shall be found fit for military service, shall be mustered or accepted into the United States service by a duly authorized mustering officer of the United States;" in line 20, after the word "call," to strike out "and" and insert "Provided, however, That;" in line 21, before the word "man," to insert "enlisted;" in the same line, after the word "man," to insert "of the militia;" in line 21, after the word "to," to strike out "obey such call" and insert "present himself to such mustering officer upon being called forth as herein prescribed."

I now ask the Secretary to read the section as it will be as I have proposed to amend it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 7. That every officer and enlisted man of the militia who shall be called forth in the manner hereinbefore prescribed and shall be found fit for military service shall be mustered or accepted into the United States service by a duly authorized mustering officer of the United States: Provided, however, That any officer or enlisted man of the militia who shall refuse or neglect to present himself to such mustering officer upon being called forth as herein prescribed shall be subject to trial by court-martial, and shall be punished as such court-martial may direct.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, that amendment simply fixes very clearly the process of induction into the United States service. There has been for a good many years a controversy between the States and the United States as to when the man became a United States soldier, and it has always been considered that the United States had the right to examine the man and pass upon his fitness.

This amendment simply requires an examination and that the United States officers shall pass upon the man's fitness before he shall become entitled to the rights and privileges of a soldier. The question of pay and the date of pay, as a matter of course, is fixed in section 11. You muster a man to date back of the time. So the amendment would not change anything of that kind. The mustering was always done during the civil war, and since musters have been made, to date back sometimes a week or six weeks—in fact, I have known them to be dated back six months. I have known many instances where the United States, after soldiers have been actually discharged and out of the service, mustered them back to a certain date and then discharged them as of a certain date, in order to fix the length of their service; but they did it after an examination.

I think this is essential. It will not cause any delay in the final passage of the bill, because it can be disposed of in a very few moments, and it settles an important question. I hope it will be agreed to, and that those who do not feel favorable to action upon the bill to-day will examine it at the earliest day possible, because I think it ought to become a law in some form. I think it is in very good form now, and it ought to be acted upon in time, so that the legislatures of the various States will have an opportunity of conforming their laws to it and making them harmonize with it, in order that they may enjoy its benefits. This proposed law gives to the States far greater benefits than any militia law ever enacted or proposed, and lightens the burdens of the State in many instances. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. Does the Senator from Missouri ask to have his amendment acted upon now, or to have it printed?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have it acted upon now, so that it may be printed in the bill.

Mr. BATE. It ought to be printed before it is acted upon.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will not object to that course.

I wish merely to say that this measure will surely be welcomed by the States, as it enables them to have a more efficient militia and relieves them from some of the cost—for instance, the cost of arms entirely. Now, most of the legislatures, I think, meet but once in two years, and, as the Senator from Wyoming says, with some the session is limited to forty days.

Mr. WARREN. They have biennial sessions.

Mr. PROCTOR. They have biennial sessions. It seems to me quite important that the measure should be acted upon before the holidays, and as there evidently will be one amendment and the bill will have to go into conference it ought to be acted upon during the present week. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Georgia if it would be agreeable to them to have me call up the bill in the morning hour Thursday or Friday of this week?

Mr. BATE. I hope the Senator will not press it so early as that. It will not give adequate time. I am not going to throw any obstacle in the way of the consideration of and action upon the bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator is aware that we are to adjourn over from next week.

Mr. BATE. Perhaps we shall do so. We have an order set for to-morrow—an unfinished business. We have one matter on hand.

Mr. BACON. I wish to say to the Senator from Vermont that, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing for him to call up the bill on Thursday if it is understood that for any special reason—for instance, lack of information on the part of any Senator—the bill will go over until the next day.

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to inquire what would become of the bill to admit the Territories?

Mr. COCKRELL. It would not be affected.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand the request is that this bill shall be taken up in the morning hour.

Mr. PROCTOR. That is all I propose.

Mr. BAILEY. It does not interfere with that order. I merely wish to have it understood now. I would not consent to anything that would displace that bill or interfere with it.

Mr. PROCTOR. I merely propose to call up this bill during the morning hour.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Territorial bill can be displaced only by a vote of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the only way.

Mr. BAILEY. It could be displaced by unanimous consent, because that is a vote of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, certainly; that would be a vote of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I was engaged in conversation with a friend at my right, and did not understand that the request was limited to the morning hour.

Mr. PROCTOR. It was.

Mr. BACON. I did not understand the Senator from Vermont to ask for unanimous consent. He said he would call up the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont simply gave notice. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Vermont to ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. PROCTOR. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Vermont to give notice that on Thursday, with the consent of the Senators from Tennessee and Georgia, he would move that this bill be considered in the morning hour.

Mr. BAILEY. My attention was diverted, and I did not hear it thoroughly. I did not want to be mistaken.

Mr. BATE. Would it not serve the purpose to say Monday? That would give Senators a chance to look at the matter very thoroughly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have a personal reason for not saying Monday.

Mr. BATE. Very well.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is because I expect to be away.

Mr. BATE. I withdraw the suggestion, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri ask action on his amendment now?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be printed with the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that the bill may now be printed as amended. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Shall the bill go back to the Calendar?

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the immigration bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending bill will go back to the Calendar.

FIRST REGIMENT OHIO VOLUNTEER LIGHT ARTILLERY.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 619) providing for the recognition of the military service of the officers and enlisted men of the First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

J. B. FORAKER,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
F. M. COCKRELL,

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. The change of language in the first section of the bill, by which for the word "passenger" were substituted the words "alien immigrant," makes the exceptions unnecessary. The exceptions were necessary when the word "passenger" was there. They are not necessary now, and if continued they would involve us in trouble in regard to the favored-nation clause. I move, therefore, to strike out, beginning in line 4, page 1, the words:

not a citizen of the Dominion of Canada, the Republic of Cuba, or of the Republic of Mexico, or a bona fide resident of the said Dominion or Republics for one year continuously prior to application for admission.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 2, line 20, there are some verbal mistakes which I desire to have corrected. After the word "nor" I move to strike out the word "to" and insert the word "upon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 3, line 2, I move to strike out the word "four" and insert the word "three;" so as to read "section 33."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 3, line 4, I move to strike out the letter "s" in the word "aliens" and to insert, after the word "alien," the word "immigrant;" so as to read "alien immigrant."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 11, line 6, after the word "company," I move to insert the words "other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 8, page 11, in the first word, strike out the "s;" so as to read "idiot." That is a misprint.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In lines 20 and 21, page 11, strike out the words "nor shall the same be remitted." This is the section to which the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] directed our attention yesterday. The Commissioner-General of Immigration stated to the committee this morning that it was entirely unnecessary and had better be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 27 there was an accidental omission of a description. In line 9, after the word "territory," insert the word "waters;" so as to read "United States, any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask to perfect the amendment passed over. In section 3, page 7, of the new print, after the word "Richford," in line 16, I move to insert the words "Norton's Mills;" and I think it ought to be "Rouse's Point," not "Rouse Point."

Mr. PROCTOR. "Rouse's Point."

Mr. LODGE. It ought to be Rouse's Point. Change it to "Rouse's Point."

Mr. PROCTOR. The possessive case.

Mr. LODGE. Yes, the possessive case—"Rouse's Point."

After the word "Buffalo," in line 18, I move to insert "Moore's Junction;" after the word "Michigan," in line 20, to insert "Duluth, St. Vincent, Warroad, Minn."

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he is sure those names should be inserted where he has suggested them? I notice the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota says——

Mr. LODGE. I called his attention to it. It is simply to follow the order of States. It comes after Michigan. He said that was a better place to put it.

Mr. PENROSE. All right. His amendment offered in the Senate read otherwise. That is the reason why I made the suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. Yes, he placed it after New York; but of course as we are going westward I think it more orderly to insert it here. In line 19 strike out "or," and then after "Pembina," in line 20, insert "Neche, Portal."

Mr. PENROSE. I would ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether Portal should follow or precede Neche. I notice in the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota it precedes.

Mr. LODGE. It ought to precede it. I gave it as given to me.

Mr. PENROSE. It ought to be Portal, then Neche.

Mr. LODGE. Strike out the word "or," in line 21, between "El Paso" and "Eagle Pass;" strike out the word "or," before "Nogales," and insert after the word "Arizona" the words "and such other additional ports as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time designate."

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I desire to call the Senator's attention to section 1. It was amended when for the moment I was not closely observing the proceedings. As a member of the committee, I do not agree to the amendment. I do not know whether the Senator offered it as a Senator or offered it on behalf of the committee. I refer to this part of the section:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $3 for each and every alien immigrant not a citizen of the Dominion of Canada, the Republic of Cuba, or of the Republic of Mexico, or a bona fide resident of the said Dominion or Republics for one year continuously prior to application for admission, who shall come by steam, sail, or other vessel, etc.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAY. One moment.

Mr. LODGE. I beg pardon. I thought the Senator had finished.

Mr. CLAY. I understood the Senator to move to strike out Canada, the Republic of Mexico, and Cuba. Now, I hold in my hand the report of the committee, which I understand was drawn by the distinguished chairman, and he says in that report:

The exemption from the payment of a head tax on citizens of Canada and Mexico coming into the United States, adopted obviously for the purpose of avoiding any unnecessary obstacles to free intercourse between peoples who, by reason of close proximity and intimate commercial and social relations, have reciprocal interests in maintaining the privilege of unobstructed passage to and fro across our land boundaries, is extended in section 1 to bona fide residents of those countries for a continuous period of one year, such residence being assumed as evidence of permanent location therein, and the same reasoning against the payment of a head tax by citizens being applicable to such payment by actual residents therein.

I desire to ask the Senator whether it is not true that we would have serious troubles by imposing a head tax on immigrants coming from Canada, the Republic of Mexico, and Cuba, countries so close to this country, and whether the reasoning and logic of the chairman of the committee are not good as against that amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator does not quite appreciate the important change which was made yesterday. That language of the report applied to the old language of the bill, which was "passenger." Of course to have put a head tax on every passenger coming from foreign contiguous territory—that is, from Mexico and Canada and Cuba—would have been an intolerable burden. It was absolutely necessary to make those exemptions. But the Senate yesterday changed the word "passenger" to "alien immigrant," which is a term of art and describes a particular class of persons.

Now, if there is an immigrant from Cuba, Canada, or Mexico who desires to come to the United States with the intention of remaining—that is, if he comes within the definition of the term "immigrant"—there is no reason why he should not be subjected to precisely the same laws as are immigrants coming from any other friendly country. It does not interfere with the citizens of those countries coming back and forth into the United States for the purpose of business or pleasure, because they are not alien immigrants, and it does not touch them at all.

Moreover, Mr. President, and this objection is absolutely fatal, if we keep in those exceptions we at once violate the favored-nation clause in regard to citizens of other countries, and the entire legislation will become nugatory.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask the Senator whether he did not give as his reason for retaining in that section of the bill the very language referred to the fact that the location of these people and the intimate commercial and business relationship existing between those people and ours absolutely demanded that they be excepted from this $3 head tax? It is stated in the report that it would cause serious business complications to place this head tax upon those immigrants.

Now, we have no objection to the people of Canada coming into this country, and in view of the close business relationship existing between those countries and this country, in my opinion the adoption of this amendment will cause serious business troubles between the people of Mexico and Cuba and Canada and the people of the United States, and in my opinion the logic and reasoning of the Senator was good in the report which he originally made to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I fear I utterly failed to make my meaning clear. As applied with the word "passenger" in the bill, those exceptions were absolutely necessary, for the reasons given in the report. As it now stands, no citizen of Mexico, Cuba, or Canada will be in the slighest degree interfered with. They will pay no tax; they will be liable to no tax; they will not be touched in any way. The only persons who will be affected will be the alien immigrant, and an immigrant from Cuba, Mexico, or Canada must be included in the same legislation as is the immigrant from Germany or from France or from England or from Italy, because otherwise we will run up against the favored-nation clause, which is in almost all of our treaties. It is impossible to have the legislation if you do not make it general and uniform. When the word "passenger" was used it would have affected all those persons coming in on business or pleasure with the intention of returning to their country.

It was then an absolute necessity, but now that the term has been changed to "alien immigrant" it is no longer a necessity, because the great mass of the people who come over the border are not alien immigrants and are not affected by the law at all. But an alien immigrant, no matter from what country he comes, must fall under the law, because we can not draw a distinction between one country and another unless we make special treaties to that effect.

Mr. CLAY. There certainly has been a shifting of positions in regard to this feature of the bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania in his argument in regard to an inquiry from the Senator from Ohio took the position that this bill did not violate the favored-nation clause of our treaties with other nations, and the junior Senator from Massachusetts has never contended on this floor that the word "passenger" referred to anything except immigrants coming from a foreign country. It was not intended to include tourists. The Senator took the position that this bill never intended to include tourists; that the word "passenger" simply meant an immigrant.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PETTUS in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. LODGE. I was entirely convinced, I must say, by the statements and arguments made yesterday that under the term "passenger" tourists could be included, and not only tourists, but citizens of the Dominion of Canada and of the Republics of Cuba and of Mexico, who come back and forth over the border for business purposes, but have no intention of remaining. It seemed to me a very important change when we made it read "alien immigrant."

I confess that the proposition of the Senator from Ohio with regard to the favored-nation clause had not occurred to me, but when he called my attention to it I saw at once that it was absolutely valid; that we could not possibly discriminate in favor of the citizens of certain countries as against other countries, and that if we retained the clause the bill would become nugatory. Now, it places no burden upon the citizens of Cuba or of the Dominion of Canada or of the Republic of Mexico—not the slightest; no more than it does on the citizens of France or of England. It places the same burden on the alien immigrant from those countries as upon the alien immigrant from all other countries; and it ought to be so. It could not be otherwise.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator, if I am not mistaken, and I do not think I am, and I believe the RECORD will bear me out, in reply to an inquiry from the Senator from New Hampshire stated on the floor of the Senate yesterday that the word "passenger" did not mean "tourist," that it meant simply an immigrant coming into this country. The Senator contended that the bill as it came from the committee, without this amendment, meant the same thing that it does mean now, with the word "passenger" stricken out and "immigrant" inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. LODGE. I certainly stated that that was my idea of the intention of the bill yesterday, but I have not the slightest objection to saying that I think I was wrong. I think the word "passenger" was broad enough to be obnoxious to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire. I have not the least objection in the world to stating that I think I was wrong, and that I have been convinced and led to change my mind.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to one statement he has made, which, I think, must have been inadvertent. I refer to his statement that the bill would be nugatory or void or would amount to nothing if it conflicted with the favored-nation clause. Would it not repeal the favored-nation clause pro tanto? It would be the last act on that subject.

Mr. LODGE. It would repeal it, I suppose, and when I said it would be nugatory I meant it would involve us in many difficulties with other countries which would claim the right to have their citizens come here on the same terms as did citizens of Mexico.

Mr. STEWART. It would have that effect.

Mr. LODGE. It would have that effect. In that way I mean it would be nugatory.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I do not believe this bill would have received the vote in the committee room of a single member of the committee if it had been stated that it was intended not only to affect immigrants coming into this country, but tourists and passengers who were simply visiting this country for pleasure. It was the object and purpose of this bill to prevent undesirable immigrants from coming into this country. That was the purpose of it before this amendment was made, and every single member of the committee construed it to mean just exactly what the bill says now. The Senator may have been mistaken; we may all have been mistaken in regard to what it meant; but certainly we intended at the time the bill came from the committee that "passenger" should mean "immigrant" and that citizens of Mexico, Canada, and Cuba should be excepted from the restrictions herein imposed.

Now, it was the consensus of opinion in the committee, in view of the fact that these Republics joined so closely to ours and were so closely connected with us in business relations, Canada being right here at our door, our neighbor and our friend, and Cuba being almost our ward, that this stringent immigration law should not apply to either of them; and I do not hesitate to say that the report made by the chairman of the committee, pointing out the danger to our business interests by reason of these restrictions applying to these three neighbors of ours, is able and can not be answered.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Does the Senator object to the bill as it is amended by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]?

Mr. CLAY. I say that we ought to be extremely careful about disturbing our friendly and commercial relations with either Canada, Mexico, or Cuba.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The language used in the bill originally presented might be open to a difference of opinion as to the effect of it, but it seems to me that the first section, as modified by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, is certainly free from any ambiguity or uncertainty, and it accomplishes in clear and distinct terms the very object the honorable Senator has in mind. It does not put any limitation upon the citizens of Canada or of Mexico or of Cuba who desire to visit the United States or who desire to come for some temporary commercial or business purpose. It only imposes a tax upon alien immigrants; that is to say, upon those who are coming from different foreign countries for permanent residence in the United States. The term "alien immigrant" does not comprehend or embrace the mere passenger or tourist coming here for temporary comfort or pleasure.

Mr. CLAY. I do not think there is any misunderstanding between the Senator and myself. I have never understood that this bill intended in any of its features to refer to anyone except immigrants. The bill never was intended to refer to the passenger or the tourist. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr.

GALLINGER] called attention to the word "passenger," and in order to remove doubt the word "passenger," in my opinion, was properly stricken out and "immigrant" inserted in lieu thereof. Undoubtedly the committee from which this bill comes intended the bill to mean just what it means now with that change, and the committee intended that the restrictions thrown around other countries should not apply to Canada, Mexico, or Cuba.

I do not contend that the bill would prevent a passenger or a tourist from coming from Canada or Cuba or Mexico to this country. Certainly it would not. But to the immigrant who steps over the line into this country from Canada, or who comes from Cuba to Florida or Georgia or any other State in the Union, the same restrictions will apply that apply to immigrants from Italy, Germany, France, or any other foreign country.

The committee intended, when they had this matter under consideration, that these, our next-door neighbors, should be our special favorites, and that the tax of $3 per capita should not apply to immigrants coming from either of these countries. That is the distinction which I wish to place before the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, the chairman of the committee, reflecting the views of every member of the committee, simply said that in applying this stringent restriction law (and I have nothing to say against its being strict except in regard to these countries) these our neighbors should not be affected by it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. PENROSE. As chairman of the committee I should like to state to the Senator from Georgia, who is, I believe, as sincerely interested as any other member of the committee in perfecting the bill so that it may be an effective method of immigration restriction, that at the time this provision was retained in the bill the point had not been raised as to whether it conflicted in any way with our treaty or international obligations. I am not prepared to say at this time whether the arguments made upon that question are, as far as I am concerned, valid or not. I am not one of those disposed to lay that stress upon international or treaty obligations that others would be disposed to give them who are perhaps much better versed than I upon international law and international obligations.

But the question has been raised since the report of the bill and since the framing of the report of the committee. It has recently been raised and ably presented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and by other Senators and in other quarters. In deference to the raising of that question and in consideration of the fact that there is something in it, in their opinion at any rate, and their opinion is entitled to the greatest respect, and in view of the fact that the alteration in the bill made upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] by which the word "passenger" was stricken out and "alien immigrant" inserted will remove to a very large extent the inconvenience that would follow from unduly harassing our neighbors upon the Mexican and Canadian border, I feel sure if the Senator from Georgia will consider carefully the bill as it stands at present there is not much in his objection, and it gives no great inconvenience to our neighbors in Canada or in Mexico or in any way diminishes the effectiveness of the measure. As far as I am concerned, I have never had any timidity about the indictment of inconsistency. I am always ready to be inconsistent or to change my mind upon a presentation of facts warranting such a course in my judgment.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, just a minute and then I am done. I have been exceedingly anxious to assist in perfecting this bill and I have been willing to give my support to every feature in the bill except one or two. The most important feature of the bill, the educational test, which is the third section, is yet to be discussed and to be passed upon. I did think that when Canada, Mexico, and Cuba were exempted the exception was a good one, and I think so now.

Thus far if there has been an argument presented that the favored clause would prevent these exceptions from being inserted, outside of the statement made by my friend the Senator from Ohio, I am not aware of it. The Senator did raise the question, and in a very intelligent way, as he always does. The Senator also stated that he was going to present authority on the question and that he was going to discuss it.

At the same time the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] stated that he was clear it was not a violation of our favored clause or our treaty relations. In my opinion it is not. At this time I am not prepared to present the argument I would present to show that it is not because the question has arisen here to-day. I do not believe that the question has even been discussed in the committee room. When the bill gets into the Senate out of the committee it will be in order, I presume, to move to insert it and we can discuss it.

For my part, at present I feel that the clause ought not to be stricken out. I am anxious to give the bill my support. I believe that if there is any question the American people are deeply and vitally interested in it is the question of foreign immigration. The last report shows that over 600,000 people from other countries came into this country last year, and 80 per cent of them located in four cities. So every American citizen is deeply and vitally interested in this important question. But above all things, with Canada and Cuba right at our doors, let us be extremely careful how we deal with either of those countries.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am not a member of the Committee on Immigration. I did not, therefore, have the benefit of the discussions that occurred in the committee room. I do not know, therefore, what may have been in the mind of the committee except only as members of the committee have spoken here in the Senate Chamber as to what they understood the provisions of the bill to mean.

But, Mr. President, it is so clear that argument is unnecessary that the bill as brought into the Senate not only restricted the immigration into this country of aliens who were seeking to come as immigrants, but it also applied to all persons not citizens of the United States who might come from any country, no matter in what character they might come. The language of the bill was that this tax of $3 a head should be levied and collected on every passenger not a citizen of the United States coming into this country.

Now, it did not seem to me that we ought to impose a tax upon people who are coming into this country simply as tourists or for temporary and proper purposes, but only on immigrants. When attention was called to that provision, the members of the committee agreed that a change should be made, and when that was corrected by the insertion of the words "alien immigrant" instead of "passenger" the further question arose as to why we should exempt from the operation of the bill alien immigrants from Mexico, Canada, and Cuba, and as soon as attention was called to that it was manifest that the one change made absolutely necessary the other change.

Canada, Cuba, and Mexico were exempted from the operation of the bill upon the theory—and they could not have been exempted upon any other intelligent theory—that we ought not to seek to tax under the provisions of the bill every passenger who might come here from Cuba, Mexico, or from Canada. As soon as the bill was restricted by the first amendment agreed to in its application only to aliens, then ceased at once the necessity for exempting the countries that are mentioned.

The reason was that stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, namely, that the purpose of this bill is to regulate the coming into this country of alien immigrants, and it ought to apply to an alien immigrant without regard to the country from which he may come. There is no reason why we should apply one rule to an alien immigrant coming from Mexico or Canada and another rule to an alien immigrant coming from some other country.

So much, therefore, for the purpose of the bill and the policy that we are seeking to establish and to subserve.

But I had in view another thought which was at the bottom of the objection I made to the bill as it was originally framed. I stated yesterday what that objection was. I said at the same time I did not care at that moment to enter upon a discussion of it and that I might not care to discuss it at any stage of the consideration of the bill. I supposed it had become unnecessary to discuss it in view of the striking out of the words exempting these three countries. They were stricken out, in the first place, because the purpose of the bill would not be subserved with those words remaining in; and they were stricken out, in the second place, because, as the Senator from Massachusetts well said, not to strike them out would be to make the whole bill an absolute nullity. Now, let me state why.

I have before me here our treaty with Japan, framed in 1894. It is a fair example, I take it, of the provisions, in the respect in which I shall call attention to this treaty, to be found in all our treaties where we have the most-favored-nation clause.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. How many treaties have we with the favored-nation clause in them?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know how many there are, but I know we have a number.

Mr. CLAY. Very few.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator may have looked it up and may be aware of the number; but if we have only one, to that extent the rule applies.

Now, I call your attention to this provision of the first paragraph of the first article of the treaty of 1894 with Japan:

> The citizens or subjects of each of the two high contracting parties shall have full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the territories of the other contracting party, and shall enjoy full and perfect protection for their persons and property.

Then omitting some of the intervening passages—

They—

shall not be compelled, under any pretext whatsoever, to pay any charges or taxes other or higher than those that are, or may be, paid by native citizens or subjects, or citizens or subjects of the most favored nation.

That is not all.

Article 14 reads as follows:

The high contracting parties agree that, in all that concerns commerce and navigation, any privilege, favor, or immunity which either high contracting party has actually granted, or may hereafter grant, to the Government, ships, citizens, or subjects of any other State shall be extended to the Government, ships, citizens, or subjects of the other high contracting party, gratuitously, if the concession in favor of that other State shall have been gratuitous, and on the same or equivalent conditions if the concession shall have been conditional; it being their intention that the trade and navigation of each country shall be placed, in all respects, by the other upon the footing of the most favored nation.

In other words, Mr. President, whatever we do in this general legislation in the way of extending a gratuitous favor—I mean a favor for which there is no compensation coming to us—we are compelled to concede to every other nation with which we have a treaty stipulation of the character to which I have referred.

The Senator from Georgia has asked me to state how many such treaties we have. I am unable to answer him, but he is aware, as other Senators are, that we have quite a number of such treaties. The very first treaty ever entered into between this country and France contained a similar provision. The first treaty ever entered into between this country and Prussia, between this country and Holland, between this country and Sweden, contained the same provision, not, perhaps, in the same identical language, but the same provision in effect.

I mention those because I was reading only this morning in Wharton's International Digest an extract from instructions given by President Jefferson to the commissioners charged with negotiating a treaty with Spain, in which he called attention to this clause of the treaty and recommended that they negotiate a similar stipulation with Spain as a part of their treaty, reciting in that respect that it would be not only of advantage to Spain, but also of advantage to us.

We may have treaties, we doubtless have, in which that clause does not occur. As to all countries with which we have such a treaty stipulation as that which I have read from our treaty with Japan, if we were to leave this exemption in the law as to Canada, Mexico, and Cuba, all they would have to do in order to have their citizens enter without any restriction whatever would be simply to say, "Here is our treaty; it is the supreme law of the land, and as the supreme law of the land, we have the right, you having granted this favor to these specified countries, to come in on the same terms." In other words, to the extent we have treaties of that kind we would absolutely nullify the law which we are so diligently seeking to enact.

Now, Mr. President, there is another idea which, it seems to me, the Senator from Georgia has overlooked. If these words go in the bill, then everybody from Mexico and Canada and Cuba can come in without regard to any of the provisions found in the bill, without the payment of the $3, or without answering the questions that alien immigrants are required to answer—without any restriction or any impediment whatever being imposed upon them.

Certainly, if the Senator is in favor of restricting immigration to this country, and improving our immigration laws in that respect, he can not desire that Canada, Mexico, and Cuba shall be allowed to send their alien immigrants into this country without any let or hindrance whatever. And yet that is the effect of leaving in the bill these exemptions.

In other words, Mr. President, to come back to the point at which I started, so long as the word "passenger" was the only word used to describe the individual upon whom this tax was to be laid, there was a propriety in exempting contiguous territory from the application of the law, because we would be overwhelmed in undertaking to collect such a tax. A man not a citizen of the United States could not come from Quebec or Montreal to the city of Boston on a railroad without having to pay $3.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FORAKER. And that is not all. Allow me to add what I had in my mind and then I will yield with pleasure. He could not come from Montreal or Quebec to Boston without not only having to pay $3, but he would have to answer a lot of questions prescribed in this proposed act as to whether he is a bigamist, as to whether he is a polygamist, as to whether he is an anarchist, as to whether he has any loathsome or contagious disease. It would be an absolute burden upon all communication between Mexico on the one hand and Canada on the other with the United States.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that unless that amendment was adopted people from Canada, Cuba, and Mexico could come to this country without any restriction whatever; that the door would be open, and that the diseased, the insane, and every class, regardless of merit, could come to this country. The Senator certainly has not made himself familiar with the entire bill. If this amendment is adopted and the words stricken out the balance of the bill would apply to Cuba, Mexico, and Canada, and the only feature affecting either of those countries will simply be that they will not have to pay the tax of $3 per capita.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am not a member of the committee, and it was not expected that I should have read the bill until it was brought before the Senate for consideration; but inasmuch as the Senator has seen fit to say that evidently I have never read the bill——

Mr. CLAY. I did not say that.

Mr. FORAKER. I am at liberty to retort that I think he never read it, either in committee or outside. Now, look at the provisions of the bill, and let us see whether or not there is a justification for the Senator's statement.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I did not say the Senator had not read the bill. I said he was not familiar with the bill if he understood that by simply striking out those words every other feature affecting those countries would be likewise affected.

Mr. FORAKER. That is a misapprehension on the part of the Senator from Georgia, or else I do not understand this bill. Now, let us see where the misapprehension is. Let me read. It is not possible that we can not understand the English language when it is spread out before us in as simple a form as this is. The first provision is:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $3 for each and every alien immigrant not a citizen of the Dominion of Canada, the Republic of Cuba, or of the Republic of Mexico, or a bona fide resident of the said Dominion or Republics for one year continuously prior to application for admission.

Now, can anything be more clear than that if we enact this statute with those words it would not have any application whatever to persons coming as alien immigrants from Canada, Mexico, and Cuba into the United States? They are expressly exempted. So much for the per capita tax.

Now, let us turn to section 3. It reads as follows:

That to the classes of aliens now excluded by law from admission into the United States there shall be added all aliens other than citizens of the Dominion of Canada, or the Republic of Mexico, or the Republic of Cuba, or bona fide residents of the said Dominion or Republics for a continuous period of at least one year prior to seeking entrance to the United States, who have attained the age of fifteen years, etc.

In other words, Mr. President, as to these crucial provisions of the bill aliens coming——

Mr. CLAY. That section has not been adopted.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, the section has not been adopted, but it is a proposed section of this bill. The bill has not been adopted, but that section, although in the form of an amendment, is the work, as I understand it, of the committee. If I do not misunderstand this bill—and I do not see how I can—according to the provisions of it any persons can come from Canada or Cuba or Mexico without paying one red copper cent, although they may be as objectionable a class of immigrants as can come from any country. That surely the Senator from Georgia does not desire. If I do not misunderstand the bill, they can come without answering any of the questions that are propounded to other alien immigrants and which other alien immigrants are required to answer.

There was a propriety, so long as the bill was broad enough to apply to every passenger without regard to whether he was an immigrant or not, in exempting our neighbors who occupy territory contiguous to us, and from which territory there is a constant stream of people coming by every railroad train that crosses the border line. But when this bill, with proper language, was restricted to immigrants, as it was intended to be restricted to immigrants in the beginning, it became appropriate to strike out the exemption of those countries from the operation of the measure, because, in the first place, there is no reason founded in policy why an alien immigrant who can not read, or who has a loathsome disease, or who is unfit in our opinion to become an American citizen on any account, should be admitted when coming from one country rather than another. There is no reason that I know of why alien immigrants of an objectionable character coming from Canada or Mexico should not be treated as alien immigrants of an objectionable character coming from Italy or Germany or any other country on the face of the globe.

But, Mr. President, there is another reason, and that is the one, as I said, that is at the foundation of my objection to this language, and that is it is unquestionably a violation of that clause with respect to the most-favored nation found in every treaty that has that clause in it. If the effect of that clause in a treaty with another country is to give that country a right to have their immigrants come here on the same terms and conditions that they come here from Canada or Mexico, and we prescribe no terms or conditions as to them, then they come in free of terms and conditions from every such other country. It is an opening of the door, a letting down of the bars, a negation absolute of all that is intended to be accomplished by this bill, in so far as we may have treaties of that kind.

I do not know with how many countries we have those treaties, but we have enough to make it so serious that we ought not to provide an open door for their immigrants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to section 3 will be stated. There are quite a number of them.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 7, line 16, after the word "Richford," insert the words "Norton's Mills;" in the same line, after "Rouse," insert an apostrophe and an "s," so as to read "Rouse's Point;" in line 18, after the word "Buffalo," insert "Moore's Junction;" in line 19, after "Port Huron," strike out the word "or;" in the same line, after "Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.," insert "Duluth, St. Vincent, Warroad, Minn.;" in line 20, after the word "Pembina," insert "Portal, Neche;" in line 21, after "El Paso," strike out the word "or;" in the same line, after the word "Texas," strike out the word "or;" in the same line, after the the word "Arizona," at the end of the line, insert the following:

And such other additional ports as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time designate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection those amendments will be regarded as agreed to. They are agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire if those are all the amendments proposed by the committee to section 3?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. No; they are not; I will answer. I have now an amendment to propose to section 3. On line 24, page 6, after the word "type," I move the insertion of what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana, on behalf of the committee, offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 24, after the word "type," insert:

Or in correspondingly distinct type or characters in the case of languages in printing which roman type is not employed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In lines 20 and 21 on page 11, I move to strike out the words "nor shall the same be remitted."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those words have already been stricken out.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I was not aware that that amendment had been moved. Have all the amendments offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] been agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had the impression that the Senator from Massachusetts moved to strike out the language touching Mexico, the Dominion of Canada, etc., in this amendment. The Chair may be mistaken, however.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In the third section?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the third section. That was the impression of the Chair, but he may be wrong.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask that that amendment be laid over until the Senator from Massachusetts returns to the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to offer what I send to the desk as an amendment to section 3. I wish to offer it now in order that it may be printed. I do not ask for a vote upon it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator offer his amendment as an amendment to the committee's amendment?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir. I ask that it may now be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas offers an amendment to the committee amendment to section 3. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 3 the following:

And provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall be understood as applying to the Territory of Hawaii, but that whenever it can be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Agriculture and of the Secretary of the Treasury that the number of agricultural laborers are insufficient for the proper agricultural development of the Territory then the Secretary of the Treasury shall authorize and allow the admission to the said Territory of Hawaii a number of Chinese laborers sufficient in his judgment to supply the demands for such labor under regulations to be issued by him and under the following conditions, to wit: That the said Chinese agricultural laborers shall be permitted to enter the Territory of Hawaii for the sole purpose of performing agricultural labor, and shall not be allowed to go from the said Territory of Hawaii to any other portion of the territory of the United States; that the persons or corporations in whose service said Chinese agricultural laborers are engaged shall first give a good and sufficient bond, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to defray the necessary expenses of the said Chinese laborer's deportation to China in case he deserts the labor for which he was permitted to come to the said Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas will lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask that section 3 be passed over until the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] returns.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be taken, in the absence of objection.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 3, line 11, after the word "change," it is proposed to insert "professional beggars;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, insane persons, epileptics, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; persons afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. On page 6, after the word "aliens," in line 5, I move to strike out all of the committee amendment down to the word "who," in line 9, on the same page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 6, line 5, after the word "aliens," it is proposed to strike out:

Other than citizens of the Dominion of Canada, or the Republic of Mexico, or the Republic of Cuba, or bona fide residents of the said Dominion or Republics for a continuous period of at least one year prior to seeking entrance to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. On page 7, line 8, after the word "alien," I move to strike out the committee amendment down to the word "whether," in line 11, on the same page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, section 3, line 8, after the word "alien," in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to strike out:

Other than a citizen of the Dominion of Canada or of the Republic of Mexico, or a bona fide resident of the same Dominion or Republic, for a continuous period of at least one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. On page 6, section 3, line 5, after the word "all," I propose to strike out the letter "s" in the word "aliens," and to insert the word "immigrants."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 6, line 5, after the word "all," it is proposed to strike out the letter "s" in the word "aliens" and to insert the word "immigrants," so as to read "all alien immigrants."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. After the word "alien," on page 7, line 8, I move to insert the word "immigrant."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, section 3, line 8, after the word "alien," it is proposed to insert the word "immigrant," so as to read:

Provided, That any alien immigrant, other than a citizen of the Dominion of Canada, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has offered an amendment, which in his absence he has requested me to look out for and to which I see no objection, with the striking out of the words exempting the peculiar class referred to from the payment of the tax. I ask the Secretary to state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts as changed by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts through the Senator from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

Whenever an alien shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country and shall have filed his preliminary declaration to become a citizen and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him, if said wife or either of said children shall be found to be affected with any contagious disorder, and it seems that said disorder was contracted on board the ship in which they came, such wife or children shall be held under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe until it shall be determined whether the disorder will be easily curable or whether they can be permitted to land without danger to other persons; and they shall not be deported until such facts have been ascertained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Where does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire the amendment to be inserted?

Mr. PENROSE. It is indicated on the amendment, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I will ask the Secretary to insert it at the proper point.

Mr. McCUMBER. At this time I should like to have the chairman of the committee explain to me the meaning of the provision on page 4, in lines 10, 11, and 12, which reads:

And provided further, That skilled labor may be imported, if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country.

I should like to have the Senator from Pennsylvania inform me who is to determine the question whether skilled labor of any particular class can be found in this country, how that provision is to be enforced, and how it is to be applied by the Department in the exclusion of a certain character of alien labor?

Mr. PENROSE. I understand that the details of this measure, or of any elaborate measure like this, must be left to the regulations of the Treasury Department; and I believe there will be no trouble whatever in their formulating such adequate regulations as will cover the point entirely. It is easy to imagine classes of skilled labor which might not exist in this country, and as such emergencies arise from time to time the Secretary of the Treasury will frame regulations to meet them. I do not recall just at this moment what kinds of skilled labor at the present time ought to be admitted under this exemption, but it is certainly very easy to imagine that such cases might arise, and this exemption is meant to meet them.

Mr. McCUMBER. I confess, Mr. President, I do not quite understand how that provision could possibly be enforced, or who is finally to determine it, or the method by which it is to be determined.

Mr. PENROSE. The Secretary of the Treasury, as I understand, would have to designate the kind of skilled labor which would be admitted. A mechanic in some particular line of industry or an artisan in some industry would be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, as I understand, and admitted.

Mr. McCUMBER. There might be a case of this kind, Mr. President: There might be a strike of skilled labor at that time; then, there might be laborers who would be unemployed. The strike might be declared off at any moment, and then these same skilled laborers might be employed. Perhaps you would have encouraged or allowed skilled laborers to land in the interim during the time these people were unemployed, because there were few or none in the country.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not imagine for a single moment that this bill is intended to cover such a case. If skilled labor in any branch of industry in the form of organized labor was on a strike, this bill certainly is not intended to permit skilled laborers in that line of industry to be imported into this country. If the Senator has any apprehension on this ground, I would accept in a moment any amendment to make that point absolutely sure and certain. It is only meant to cover this case. I imagine the cases are very few and far between, but certainly they are possible. I recollect that in the past they have occurred, although I can not recall just at this juncture the character of the skilled labor which was brought into the country. But such cases have occurred in the past and may occur in the future. Take the case where an industry is established here and where certain forms of skilled labor do not exist in the country, and without them the industry could not be continued.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand the proposition, but at the same time I do not yet understand from the Senator how this provision is to be carried into effect.

Mr. PENROSE. The nearest explanation I can give the Senator is that the Secretary of the Treasury will designate the forms of skilled labor which will be exempt under the law.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania, if it will not interfere with the object the committee have in mind, that he could render the contingency suggested by the Senator from North Dakota impossible by striking out the word "unemployed." Then, if there was no labor of that particular kind in this country and some new enterprise was inauguated in a foreign country, and it was sought to establish a similar one here, it would be easy enough to import that labor under this bill. Of course it might happen that after they had brought some of that labor into this country there would still not be enough to extend the new enterprise.

Mr. PENROSE. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. LODGE. To strike out the word "unemployed?"

Mr. PENROSE. Striking out the word suggested by the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 11, page 4, after the word "kind," it is proposed to strike out the word "unemployed;" so as to make the proviso read:

And provided further, That skilled labor may be imported, if labor of like kind can not be found in this country.

Mr. PENROSE. I will accept the amendment on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In section 3, page 6, line 12, after the word "alien," I move to insert the word "immigrant."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In section 3, page 6, line 13, after the word "alien," I move to insert the word "immigrant."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. At the end of line 19, on the same page, after the word "alien," I move to insert the word "immigrant."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In section 3, page 7, line 1, after the word "alien," I move to insert the word "immigrant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the bill?

Mr. LODGE. There is one amendment which was passed over, Mr. President, if I may call attention to it. It is section 36 of the old bill, and to it I ask the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], as it was at his request that I asked that the amendment be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Section 36 of the new bill?

Mr. LODGE. Section 36 of the new bill also. The committee recommend that that section be stricken out; and I ask the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to it, because it was passed over at his request.

Mr. BERRY. What amendment is it?

Mr. LODGE. It is the amendment relating to the sale of liquors in the Capitol building.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I understand that this amendment prohibiting the sale of liquor in the grounds of the Capitol was put in the bill by the House and is in the bill at this time. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if that is correct?

Mr. LODGE. That provision was put in the bill by the House, and the Committee on Immigration of the Senate recommend that it be stricken out.

Mr. BERRY. The committee recommends that it be stricken out by the Senate, but it has not yet been voted upon.

Mr. President, I do not know, although I think it probable, that such a provision is somewhat out of place in a bill of this character; but it is there; the House of Representatives has put it there; in my judgment it ought to be in some bill, and I am not willing to vote to strike it out, it having been put in this bill by the House of Representatives. If I had offered such a provision, I would have offered it to some other bill. The House of Representatives seek to stop the sale of liquor in this Capitol; they have passed that kind of a bill; and now the Senate committee proposes to strike out that provision. I do not believe that the Capitol is the proper place in which to sell liquor. I do not believe it is the proper place in which to run a saloon. Whatever one's opinion may be on sumptuary laws or prohibition laws, I for one think that this Capitol is not a proper place in which to run a saloon. It belongs to all the people of the country, and is visited by people from every section of the Union, thousands of whom do not believe that liquor should be sold here; and I agree with that view. Therefore I for one propose to vote against striking out the provision, it having been put in the bill by the House of Representatives.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Committee on Immigration left out this provision as contained in the bill as it came from the other House because in the opinion of the committee it did not belong in the measure. I will not at this time enter into a discussion with the Senator from Arkansas regarding the propriety of prohibiting the sale of liquor in the Capitol; but I am willing, for the sake of the argument, to agree with him in all he has said and to promise him that if he will introduce a separate measure to accomplish his purpose I will vote for it.

The Committee on Immigration did, however, go as far as was proper and pertinent to the purposes of the present measure in inserting a provision prohibiting the sale of liquor at immigrant stations against the recommendation of some of those engaged in the administration of the law in connection with the Immigration Bureau. I think that provision of the bill has entirely satisfied the advocates of temperance and of the prohibition of the sale of liquor in connection with Government buildings as being all that could be reasonably asked, because it is all that is pertinent to the purpose of the measure. I hope, therefore, the bill will not be embarrassed by the insertion of a provision which does not pertain to the bill and regarding which there is a diversity of opinion.

Mr. BERRY. It is not a proposition to insert it in the bill. It is already in the bill. This is a proposition on the part of the committee to strike it out of the bill.

I repeat that I was somewhat surprised to see it placed in this particular bill, but the House of Representatives had the matter under consideration and they put it in the bill. Now, if the Senate votes to strike it out, it seems to me that we go upon the record as being in favor of having a saloon in the Capitol.

I do not know where one now exists in this building. The only one I have ever heard of as being kept here was on the side of the House of Representatives. I take it for granted they have become tired of it and want to get rid of it, and therefore they placed this provision in the bill. They having put it there, I am not willing that the Senate should strike it out. The House probably knew what they wanted. The provision is in the bill and if it remains there it will be a valid law.

I repeat what I said a while ago, that whatever one's opinion may be about a temperance law or prohibition, I do not believe that the people of this country want a saloon kept in the Capitol of the United States. If Senators, or Representatives, or men who are employed in this Capitol want to get whisky they can step beyond the Capitol grounds and get it; but I do not think it speaks well for the United States for the Senate to say they will knock out a provision already put in the bill by the House of Representatives and thereby open up this Capitol for the purpose of selling liquor. Therefore, for one I will not vote to strike it out.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not oppose the provision of the House bill upon the intrinsic merits of the proposition. I have not favored its retention in the bill because, as I said, it did not seem to me pertinent to the general purposes of the bill. I will ask that the question be put, and will leave it to the Senate to determine whether or not the provision shall be put into the measure.

Mr. BAILEY. Before the Senator from Pennsylvania resumes his seat, I should like to ask if, as a matter of law, any legislation of the two Houses is necessary to suppress the sale of liquor at either end of the Capitol. Is it not true, as a matter of law, that each House has absolute control over what shall be sold in its restaurant?

Mr. PENROSE. I think the Senator's contention is absolutely right—that each House has entire control over those matters, and does exercise control at present.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I would be perfectly willing to take my responsibility either for permitting or suppressing the sale of it at this end of the Capitol. It seems to me gentlemen in the other House ought to take their responsibility there without enacting into a law a perfectly useless performance.

Now, I believe that as to a part of the Capitol there is probably a joint commission or some joint authority between the two bodies, but I take it that the Senate would not recognize the right of the House to a voice in what is done in this Chamber or in the committee rooms above or in its restaurant below. And I for one would not want to see the Senate assume any such right to a voice in what is permitted at the House end of the Capitol. It looks to me a little singular that what either body can do they want them both to do, in order to divide the responsibility. I think each body ought to take its own responsibility on a question of this kind. If a man looks for the law, without a very carefully prepared index he would be a little puzzled, to say the least, to find a liquor prohibitory law affecting the National Capitol in an immigration statute.

Mr. BERRY. In regard to the last remark of the Senator from Texas, I will state, as stated by the chairman of the committee, that the bill already contains a prohibition of the sale of liquor at immigration stations where the immigrants are landed. Therefore it would not be altogether so difficult to find it as the Senator from Texas intimated.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Arkansas understands that neither House of Congress alone has any power over that question, and therefore, on the subject of immigration, all matters, both main and collateral, may properly be thus dealt with. I mean, and I was unfortunate if I did not make my meaning plain, that to find a prohibitory law affecting the National Capitol building in such an act would be puzzling.

Mr. BERRY. It is not very material where it is, so it is in the law.

Now, of the right of the House to control its side of the building and the Senate its side, I suppose there can be no question. But the House have spoken in this bill by putting in it a provision to the effect that they want to stop the sale of liquor in the Capitol. The Senator says that either House can stop it in the space over which they have peculiar jurisdiction. The Senator will not deny that both of them uniting together and putting it in a law can prohibit it at both ends of the Capitol.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to ask the Senator whether he understands that if this provision remains in the bill and is violated, its violation would constitute a punishable offense? That is, could either the House or the Senate be arraigned, and if so, before whom, for a violation of it?

Mr. BERRY. I understand if it is the law it will prohibit the sale, and I suppose its violation can be punished as other violations of laws are punished.

Mr. BAILEY. I imagine that the man who permitted it to be sold could be arraigned. But permit me to say, just in that line, that for one I am not willing to concede the right of the other branch of Congress to a voice in what is done on this side, just as I am not willing as a member of this body to assume any control over what is done at the other end.

Now, if you select a peculiar and sensitive question like the prohibition question, then the next one becomes less sensitive, until after a while it will require the joint action of the two bodies to determine what either body will do. We are supreme over our end of the Capitol, and I am perfectly willing to meet the responsibility that comes from that fact, and I insist that gentlemen at the other end shall meet their responsibility. I will not vote for any proposition that recognizes the right of either House to interfere with what is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the other, either on prohibition or on any other question.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to get a little light on this interesting subject, and I wish somebody who is informed would tell me whether any liquor is sold at the Senate end of the Capitol now. I have been informed that there is not any liquor so sold, and that the House (this is an old question, which has been coming over here spasmodically and at intervals ever since I have been here; I think this is the third time) is simply playing a hypocritical game before the people of the country and endeavoring to make the Senate attend to its morals and its virtues. I am opposed to any such proposition. I should like to see the House get what it seems to want and which it has the right to get without this legislation, and yet it continues to parade its morality or temperance or whatever you call it before the country, while endeavoring to make the Senate save it from itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to the bill as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, before the bill is reported to the Senate, I should like to understand, if I may, what the effect of this bill is as to the exclusion of aliens. It has been very much amended; so much so that I am in doubt as to what its effect will be. If I understand the bill, it now proposes to exclude from the United States only alien immigrants and that all other persons who are not immigrants can come into the United States freely without the payment of the head tax. I do not think that will exclude a great many from the United States if the language is construed according to its meaning. It was stated here yesterday in debate, I see, that an immigrant is a person who comes from a foreign country with the intention to settle in this country.

Mr. LODGE. Not to settle.

Mr. GALLINGER. To remain. However, that would mean to settle.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I certainly think I am not mistaken in my recollection of the definition as quoted from the Century Dictionary by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. I will find it in a minute. However that may be, whether it means to settle in the United States or to remain in the United States, it will not reach a great class of undesirable immigration to this country. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] said:

> The Century Dictionary gives as one of the definitions of the word "immigrant" a foreigner who enters a country, to settle there.

I thought I was not mistaken in my recollection.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose the class of undesirable immigrants to whom the Senator refers are those known as birds of passage, who come here for a short time and return, taking their money with them. But the word "immigrant" is the word now used in all our laws on the subject; it is perfectly defined, and the classes it covers are perfectly well known; and I think its meaning has been established by decisions. I think the Senator will find that it will cover all the undesirable classes if I guess rightly the classes he has in mind.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is what I wanted to know. I am not familiar with the decisions. I simply know that yesterday it was stated in the Senate that the Century Dictionary definition of immigrant is a person who comes here to settle. It does not seem to me that it is worth while to leave this matter so indenite as it will be left by this bill.

I apprehend that after this bill has passed there will be very few alien persons coming to this country who will admit that they have come here to settle or remain. They will all claim they have been informed that there is plenty of work to be had in this country at good wages, and what they have come here for is to work until they get a little money, and then take themselves home and better their condition at home. Now, how in the practical enforcement of this bill, is that question to be met? Take the Italians. They do not come here intending to remain and settle in this country. They come, as do the Chinese, to work a while, get American wages, and then go back to their country and buy a little farm or a little business there, and so better their condition at home. The question will immediately arise whether they are immigrants in the true meaning of that word.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Excuse me for just a moment. They will say, "We have not come to the United States to settle here. We heard that there was labor here, and we wanted to earn a little money and go back with it."

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I was merely going to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether the word "immigrant" has not appeared frequently in the statutes of the United States and whether it has been used in any different sense from that in which it is now used?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was trying to find what an immigrant is within the meaning of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. My understanding is that an immigrant within the meaning of the statutes is a person who comes here not for temporary abode, but for permanent residence.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Has it been held that a person who comes to the United States intending to work for one season and go back is an immigrant within the meaning of the statutes against immigration? Are there any decisions to that effect? I do not know about this matter. I think the committee ought to give us definite information on the subject, because if we leave open any question here as to what an immigrant is, it will make a great deal of disturbance in the enforcement of the law.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I do not understand, speaking for myself, that the meaning of the word "immigrant" is enlarged or restricted by the proposed act. It is used in precisely the same sense in which it has been used in previous acts. I suppose it will be construed by the administrative officers, after the enactment of the bill into law, in the same manner in which it has been construed heretofore.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Has it been construed heretofore that a person coming into this country of his own volition for the purpose of working here temporarily and going back is subject to the prohibitions contained in our present immigration law?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I can not speak from positive knowledge upon that matter, but my very strong impression is it has not been so applied.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think, Mr. President, the passage of the pending bill will raise this question. Some person will apply at the Canadian border and say, "I heard that there was farm work in New England; that they want some help to get in the harvest. I have come down temporarily for that purpose, and when the harvest season is over I am going back." You will find that all along, in Minnesota and elsewhere; and unless that class of people can be excluded under the provisions of this law, they will all come in in that way. Who is going to determine that question? Who is going to say that they have come here for any other purpose than for that of temporary employment?

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me to state that there is nothing in this bill which alters the present law in its relation to the point raised by the Senator from Connecticut? The same condition prevails at present as to the construction of the word "immigrant" and as to the application of the present restriction to the peculiar class which he has in mind. This proposed law, therefore, raises no question on that point, and I have not heard that any complaints have been made by Senators or Representatives from the border States as to the administration of the present law by the Bureau of Immigration.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire, if the Senator will permit me, whether the words "alien immigrant" now appear in any law of the United States?

Mr. PENROSE. I could not state positively to the Senator.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think they do not. The word is "alien."

Mr. PENROSE. I confess I do not see how that enlarges the scope of the present law.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We have by statute provided for certain excluded classes. If I am not mistaken we speak in that exclusion act of "aliens," not "alien immigrants." I do not think that term has ever before been in our statute books. However, I am not familiar enough with them to assert this positively. The exclusion act reads in this way:

> The following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States in accordance with existing acts regulating immigration other than those concerning Chinese labor.

I know we call our law the immigration law, but I think you will not find in any act now on the statute books any provision for excluding "alien immigrants" as distinguished from "aliens" generally. Inserting the word "immigrant" raises a new question. It is not to be decided on the question whether or not a person is an alien as it is now to be decided. Certain aliens are not permitted to come into this country. [A pause.] I find I am mistaken. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has called my attention to the act of 1893, where the term "alien immigrant" is used. But in my judgment you will have to meet the question whether persons coming here for temporary service which they expect to obtain are alien immigrants. I think there will be a great deal of difficulty under this proposed law in excluding persons who come claiming that that is their intention. I do not know whether the point has ever been raised or whether it has been decided in any court, but I am quite sure that the point will be made.

Mr. PENROSE. As I have said, the point as raised by the Senator from Connecticut is raised under the laws as they exist at present. There is nothing in this bill to cause that question to be raised by reason of the fact that there is anything new contained herein. I should imagine that persons coming in temporarily along the New England border, if they are found to be insane, if they are found to have contagious and infectious diseases, if they come under the bars contained in this bill, ought to be kept out. In any event, I doubt if the Senator from New Hampshire, who represents one of the border States, has had brought to his attention any complaints of inconvenience or hardship resulting from the present administration of the immigration laws as regards this transient immigration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania permit me?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am gratified to have him state, from his knowledge of the immigration law, that the proposed law makes no change in that regard. Almost every mill in New England is dependent upon people who come from Canada to New England. In every brickyard in New England the workingmen are men who come temporarily from the Dominion of Canada, with the intention on the part of most of them of returning.

Mr. HOAR. So of the farmers and woodchoppers.

Mr. GALLINGER. The senior Senator from Massachusetts suggests so with respect to woodchoppers and farmers. They are almost all French Canadians. I have been a little troubled myself, and thought of asking this question, so that it might go into the RECORD with a disclaimer from the chairman of the committee that the provisions of this bill changed existing law, or that there was any danger of that class of people being interrupted in their coming to New England and departing to their Canadian homes when their employment was at an end. It would be not only a hardship, but absolutely the means of stopping business to a very large extent in the line of manufacturing and otherwise in the New England States. I am sure the committee had no such purpose, and I have no fear that any decision will be rendered by the officials of the Treasury Department which would accomplish so disastrous a result.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me, I think with us the great body of the French who come here become citizens. There are comparatively few who come and go back. But the ones who do come and go back have never been interfered with, and I do not think they ever would be under the proposed law.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does that apply to those who come from Italy?

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not think it does. I think they are treated differently.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How do they make the discrimination? Suppose an Italian comes to this country, and he is questioned, and in reply to the question whether he is going to remain here he says, "No; I have come over here to get temporary work, to earn a little money for myself, and I am going back as soon as I have done it." How are you going to make the discrimination? How are you going to say it is proper when the person comes in from Canada and that it is not proper when the person comes from Italy?

Mr. LODGE. As a matter of fact, they have discriminated between those classes of immigrants.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If they have, the law does not provide for any such discrimination, and some day the question will be raised and will go into the courts.

Mr. PENROSE. The reason is found in the fact that these laws are administered with discretion and judgment. It is very easy to criticise these laws from a theoretical standpoint. A question was raised the other day upon the floor of the Senate by some Senator objecting to the measure. He said it was ridiculous to put a whole carload of visitors to the inconvenience and hardship of an examination at the border where the train may be only a few minutes at a station and then rush on. As a matter of fact, the inspector goes ahead perhaps 50 or 100 miles. He does not harass every passenger in the car. He does not inconvenience American citizens returning to their homes or persons who are not subject to the operations of this bill.

These laws are administered with tact, judgment, and discretion, and the fact that this bill does not in any way add any additional discrimination or affect this particular class in any manner different from the conditions under which they at present come into the country and leave it, and the fact that no complaint is made about the administration of the immigration laws in this respect, would seem to me to render it perfectly safe to pass this proposed law so far as this objection is concerned without any apprehension of difficulty or trouble.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I made my inquiry from the standpoint of desiring to restrict immigration. I think there is altogether too much of it now in this country, and I wanted to be sure that in passing this law there had been restrictions put upon immigration rather than that the possibility of immigration had been enlarged. I hope it will be found, when the law shall come to be put into practical operation, that such has been the effect of this law; but I doubt it very much.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to offer a substitute for section 21.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, on page 19, to strike out all of section 21 and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

That any alien who shall come into the United States in violation of law or who shall be found a public charge therein from causes existing prior to landing shall be deported, as hereinafter provided, to the country whence he came at any time within two years after arrival, at the expense, including one-half of the cost of inland transportation to the port of deportation, of the person bringing such alien into the United States, or, if that can not be done, then at the expense of the immigrant fund referred to in section 1 of this act. Any alien who becomes a public charge by reason of lunacy, idiocy, or epilepsy within two years after arrival will be presumed to have become such from causes existing prior to landing unless the contrary be affirmatively shown.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the clause in the bill of the last session found in section 13, which provides for taking the immigrant before the immigration officer at the port of arrival, precludes any physical examination being made of the proposed immigrant in the foreign country?

Mr. PENROSE. What page does the Senator refer to?

Mr. RAWLINS. In the original bill it is found in section 13. It is that provision of the bill which changes existing law by causing the immigrant to be taken before the immigration officer at the point of arrival, and thereby excluding any physical examination of the immigrant in the foreign country.

Mr. PENROSE. As I understand it, Mr. President, the alien immigrant is examined by the medical officers of the transportation companies prior to his embarkation. That examination is necessary for the protection of the companies as much as for any other purpose, as they are subject to certain penalties, disabilities, fines, and expenses for immigrants improperly brought into this country.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, the Senator is familiar with the subject, but as I understand the practice of these transportation companies it is that they employ every inducement by way of advertisement in foreign countries to persons to emigrate to the United States; that they charge these immigrants for transportation about $40, while the cost to the companies is something less than $2 per capita; and that it is the practice of these companies to make no inspection with a view of excluding any person from transportation to the United States.

It seems to me that we ought to insert in the bill a provision which would obviate that difficulty. I understand that now there is no such provision, and the existing law is modified to this extent, that it is now left entirely to the transportation companies to determine who shall be admitted to their ships for transportation to the United States.

It is an exceeding great hardship to poor and ignorant people in foreign countries to be brought to this country, paying for their transportation, and upon their arrival and examination to be excluded and forced to return. The hardship does not fall upon the transportation companies, but it falls upon the proposed immigrant. If there is anything which requires any sort of an examination abroad, other than that made unofficially by the transportation companies, I would ask the chairman of the committee if he will kindly state it.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not understand that the bill contains any change in the present system in that respect so far as examination on the other side of the water is concerned. That opens up a very wide question as to how far the Government can and should conduct its inspection at the point of embarkation. It implies radical departures from present methods and a very large increase in the force of the Immigration Bureau. Various methods have been suggested, as consular inspection, an increased force connected with the Immigration Bureau, but it has not been thought necessary or wise at this time to go into any radical departure of that character.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if the law as it now exists does not provide for inspection at the port of departure?

Mr. PENROSE. As I understand it, Mr. President, it is simply an examination by the ship's officers, it being supposed to be to the interest of these transportation companies not to go to the expense of bringing over immigrants who would be barred by the law and thereby putting the transportation companies to the inconvenience and expense of returning them.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Texas will allow me, I will say that the matter of consular inspection was very carefully considered in previous years. There is a great deal to be said for it, but we found it impossible to establish it owing to the objections made by countries in which our consuls were; they would not permit a consular inspection.

Mr. BAILEY. I have a recollection that the matter was debated in the other House.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it has been debated here and considered at great length, and that was the conclusive objection.

Mr. BAILEY. I was not certain of the conclusion, but I was certain that the weight of the argument favored that inspection at the port of departure. The practical difficulty had not occurred to me. Then, I understand, this bill makes no change whatever in that respect?

Mr. PENROSE. Only that it makes a little more efficient and effective the present system.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator in charge of this bill that the bill, with all amendments that have been adopted up to this time, be reprinted. There have been quite a number of amendments. The bill is a very important one. Then let it go over, in order that we may have further time to inspect it and determine upon these amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, I will make the request that the bill be reprinted.

Mr. LODGE. There are other amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. I will first ask the Senate to consider a few amendments which Senators desire to have considered at the present time. That will probably perfect the bill. It can then be reprinted and considered on another day by the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Before we pass from the consideration of the bill, I should like to ask one other question. I should like to have the last clause of the first section read as it now stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clause referred to will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, by agreement with transportation lines, as provided in section 33 of this act, may arrange in some other manner for the payment of the duty imposed by this section upon alien immigrants from Canada, Mexico, or Cuba, either as to all or as to any such aliens.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What I wanted to inquire—I presume it is easily explained, but I do not quite understand it—is why that proviso was inserted. The immigrants who come from foreign countries to ports in the United States have to pay $3 a head, and it is to be charged to the steamship lines and paid by them. Now, why should there be any different method? What is the necessity of making a different arrangement as to the immigrants who come from Canada or Mexico?

Mr. LODGE. In a subsequent section of the bill authority is given to the Secretary of the Treasury to make special arrangements with railroad and steamship lines coming from foreign contiguous territory. That has been found to facilitate the execution of the laws very much. It is already the practice in the case of Chinese immigrants, and it has been found that it was better to be able to make special arrangements with railroad and steamship companies from foreign contiguous territory, and to allow the Secretary of the Treasury to do that; that it was greatly for the convenience of the companies and of the Government also.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In what respect do those arrangements differ from the arrangements made with foreign steamships coming to a port of the United States?

Mr. LODGE. They make an arrangement with a railroad company in regard to the collection and payment of the head tax, for example, so as to prevent the delay of the trains and to arrange for any of the details. It is the desire of the railroad and steamship companies to be allowed to make those arrangements. They take the responsibility in the case of railroads, and by making arrangements with the Government they are enabled to do it in a much more speedy and better fashion. There is no need of making an arrangement with a vessel coming into port. You have it all there on one ship, and it is going to stay a week; but with a passing train it is very important to be able to make an arrangement with the company.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is it that as the trains pass the number of immigrants shall be determined, and then at a certain time, a month afterwards, it is all charged up and paid in a lump?

Mr. LODGE. The railroad company takes the responsibility and pays the Government. The Secretary of the Treasury makes the arrangement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the bill as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] had an amendment which he intended to offer. I do not know whether he intended to offer it in Committee of the Whole or after the bill is reported to the Senate. I believe it would be in order to offer it in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment can be offered in the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY. Perhaps that is his intention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the vote on concurring in the amendments be taken in gross?

Mr. FORAKER. Has the bill just been reported to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has just been reported to the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I rose to make an inquiry. I understood that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON] had an amendment which he was to offer before the bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. I rose for that purpose, and I will call up the amendment, if it is in order, at this time and ask the Senate to consider it. I introduced the amendment to-day and it was ordered to be printed, but I see no reason why it should not be considered at this time.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. BURTON. I ask that the amendment be read and that it be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of section 3 the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall be understood as applying to the Territory of Hawaii, but that whenever it can be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Agriculture and of the Secretary of the Treasury that the number of agricultural laborers are insufficient for the proper agricultural development of the Territory, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall authorize and allow the admission to the said Territory of Hawaii a number of Chinese laborers sufficient in his judgment to supply the demands for such labor under regulations to be issued by him, and under the following conditions, to wit: That the said Chinese agricultural laborers shall be permitted to enter the Territory of Hawaii for the sole purpose of performing agricultural labor, and shall not be allowed to go from the said Territory of Hawaii to any other portion of the territory of the United States; that the persons or corporations in whose service said Chinese agricultural laborers are engaged shall first give a good and sufficient bond to the the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury to defray the necessary expenses of the said Chinese laborer's deportation to China in case he deserts the labor for which he was permitted to come to the said Territory.

Mr. HOAR. I think that should go over.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, it seems to me that the proposition involved in the proposed amendment is one that ought not to be considered by the Senate until it has been referred to the appropriate committee and considered by that committee. I hope the honorable Senator from Kansas who offered the amendment will agree to that course.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I am not solicitous about the present consideration of this amendment, provided it can go over and be considered by the committee; but I want to raise this question on the pending bill. I brought it up at this time because the bill was about to be reported. If the chairman is willing that the bill shall go over so that the committee can consider this amendment and that Senators may have an opportunity to study it, I have no objection at all, but I do think that it is germane to this bill.

I will say that I am very much in favor of this proposed legislation. I did not want to bring up this question before the Senate until after our committee—I mean the committee that investigated conditions in Hawaii—had reported; but this is a matter that is easily understood, and I have decided, for myself, that it is the kind of legislation that ought to be enacted.

Hawaii to-day is in a state of industrial and economic depression, just the opposite exactly from conditions that prevail in this country, and well-nigh everybody there attributes it to the fact that they can not get Chinese labor. I think it will be admitted by anyone who has carefully studied the situation in Hawaii that the native Hawaiian will not perform agricultural labor. The white man will not perform it there. They have attempted the importation of negroes, and that is a failure. It must be performed by either Chinese or Japanese, and as between the two everybody prefers Chinese. I think I am safe in saying that the merchants, the planters, the tradespeople, the manufacturers, and the skilled laborers as well are all in favor of this proposed legislation.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Kansas permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Did the Senator make inquiry to know what was the desire of the native Hawaiians on the subject of the admission of Chinese?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir; they are in favor of it. I would not say all, for that would take in everybody, but certainly a very large majority of them are in favor of it.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Kansas a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Does this amendment come by authority of the Committee on Hawaii?

Mr. BURTON. No, sir. The Senator refers to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico?

Mr. HOAR. The standing committee which includes Hawaii in its jurisdiction. Has that committee considered and recommended this amendment?

Mr. BURTON. No, sir; it has not been considered by the committee. It has been considered very carefully by the subcommittee which was sent to Hawaii to investigate conditions there, and that committee has not reported. I may say, since the question has been asked, that probably the members of that committee would not agree about this matter. Hence I hesitated to raise the question at this time, but seeing that this bill was up and about to be put upon its passage, as I thought the subject was germane, I brought it before the Senate for the Senate's consideration. There is much more——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I do not desire to unduly interrupt the Senator. Of course I recognize the fact that the Senator had an opportunity to ascertain the wishes of the native population, and his opportunity was very much greater than mine. Mine was extremely limited, but in the limited opportunity which I had the information which came to me was that the native people did not desire the Chinese to be brought in, whatever may be said as to other classes of the population of those islands.

Mr. BURTON. Well, I think, Mr. President, I risk nothing in saying that a very large majority of the natives, and especially the more intelligent natives, are in favor of restricted Chinese immigration to that Territory. This amendment, as Senators will observe, I think, has been drawn with very great care. It provides for the deportation of a Chinaman as soon as he leaves the plantation or as soon as he quits agricultural labor.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like very much to ask the Senator from Kansas a question.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it not a fact that those who advocate the admission of Chinese into the Hawaiian Islands do so for the reason that their labor is very much cheaper than that of any other contract labor that it is possible for them to obtain?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. In other words, the planters are now making from 15 to 30 per cent on their sugar plantations in the Hawaiian Islands, while the Kansas farmer makes 6 per cent and the California farmer the same. If they can get Chinese labor they can double their income. That is the whole kernel in the nut. The whole question is one of cheap labor.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator asked me a question?

Mr. PERKINS. That is all.

Mr. BURTON. I will state to the Senator that every plantation in Hawaii I heard of, except one, has passed its dividends within the last two years instead of making the profits the Senator speaks of. The Senator is mistaken when he says that the owners of the plantations there are making money. They are not making money. They can not make money at the present price of sugar and the present price of labor. It is the Japanese who have raised the price of labor higher than the traffic will bear, and they are not as good citizens as the Chinamen. That is the universal testimony, so far as I could get it, of all persons in Hawaii.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I believe we now admit the Japanese without restriction, the same as we admit Frenchmen?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. And we do not admit Chinamen?

Mr. BURTON. No, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yet the Senator says that it is the universal testimony that the Chinese make better citizens than the Japanese. Now, there is a contradiction out here somewhere, or else we have been legislating in the dark, and I should like the Senator to explain that.

Mr. BURTON. Well, I am speaking about the kind of Japanese who go to Hawaii and the kind of Chinamen who go to Hawaii, as they tell me. I do not think I talked to a single employer of labor who did not speak about the fact that the Chinese are preferable.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Who is to deport the Chinese laborer who does not do his work, according to this amendment?

Mr. BURTON. The employer must give a bond, and the Senator will observe that it is placed in the discretion or under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not know that that is the best way to do it.

Mr. HOAR. Then if a man—you call a person a man under these circumstances—does not do his work to the satisfaction of his employer, somebody is to be given the power to take him and deport him. Who has that power?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think that the Senator from Massachusetts, if he will pardon me, states the matter just as it is.

Mr. HOAR. Let me read the amendment. It is as follows:

Mr. BURTON. Very well.

Mr. HOAR (reading):

That the persons or corporations in whose service said Chinese agricultural laborers are engaged shall first give a good and sufficient bond, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to defray the necessary expenses of the said Chinese laborer's deportation to China in case he deserts the labor for which he was permitted to come to the said Territory.

Now, my question is, Who is to deport him?

Mr. BURTON. The employer gives a bond to the Secretary of the Treasury, and I suppose that the Secretary of the Treasury would, through his officers, deport him.

Mr. HOAR. Where is the authority to deport by law a man who is lawfully there because he does not do his work?

Mr. BURTON. Well, the Senator will observe that is to be done when he does not do a particular kind of work.

Mr. HOAR. Exactly; when he does not do a particular kind of work.

Mr. BURTON. This amendment would permit Chinese immigration for agricultural purposes only. It would not allow them to go into the mills or perform any kind of skilled labor. If the Chinaman should leave the plantation, or the rice field, or should leave agricultural work, then he would be subject to deportation.

Mr. HOAR. Who is going to deport him? I want to understand about this taking a man by the nape of the neck, on what is now American soil, and carrying him out if he does not do his work to the satisfaction of his employer. It is an example which, I suppose, the Senator from Kansas thinks a good one; but I want to understand all the bearings and relations of it, if I can.

Mr. BURTON. Just how the Secretary of the Treasury would proceed, or what machinery would be brought into play to send the Chinaman back, I have not fully considered.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should inject a remark there?

Mr. BURTON. Not at all.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Massachusetts makes an inquiry upon that point as though deportation was something new.

Mr. BURTON. I was just about to say that.

Mr. FORAKER. We have been deporting Chinamen for a good many years when they were here under circumstances that warranted it. It is done, I believe, by the Treasury Department, acting through officials charged with that duty in proper cases.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; they are deported. I do not comment upon that law now one way or the other; but, at any rate, they are deported as persons who have no right to be here and had no right to come here, and that is a well-settled system on which we agreed. Now, when a man has lawfully come within our borders under a contract and is lawfully at work under his contract, it is said if he does not work he may be deported. It may be that the reason he does not work is because he is cruelly treated: it may be because he claims the employer has not kept his contract: it may be because he is sick and can not work; but whatever may be the reason, somebody, not a judge, and, so far as I am aware, not the Secretary of the Treasury in person, for he is 5,000 miles away, is to take that man by a summary process and carry him back to China. I have not suggested to anybody whether that is right or wrong, but I think the Senate should know the machine.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BURTON. With pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have never seen this amendment until just this moment, when it has been put into my hands. I never heard it read until it was read at the desk a few moments ago, therefore the phraseology of it may be such, when I come to examine it, that possibly I should want to change it. My interest in this amendment is due to the fact that I happen to be the chairman of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. The Senate, by resolution adopted just before the vacation, authorized a subcommittee of that committee to visit the Hawaiian Islands and there make investigation and then make report to us as to the results of their investigation of a number of subjects. That subcommittee has returned. They were in the islands some weeks. I understand they investigated many subjects, and that they are preparing an elaborate report of their investigations.

I am told that they found the industrial condition of the islands very much depressed; that instead of sugar planters making 15 and 20 per cent profit upon their plantations, as stated by the Senator from California, they are operating at a loss. I do not know what the fact may be, but that is what the members of the subcommittee have informally reported to me; that the trouble is not that they can not get cheap labor, but rather that they can not get enough labor. The natives are not satisfactory laborers, on the plantations at least, and many of them will not labor at all. The only satisfactory labor they have been able to get is the Chinese labor. They want to be saved from the consequences of this ruinous depression, and in that behalf they want us so to legislate as to allow, in a restricted and safe way, some Chinese labor. I say restricted and safe, having in view our legislation on the general subject of bringing into that island Chinese laborers.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Now, I come to answer the Senator from Massachusetts, if he will bear with me just a moment.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator a question, but I will wait.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. Under our treaty stipulations with China no laborers can come into this country on any account. The Congress, in pursuance of our treaty stipulations, has so enacted that they can not come to work on plantations or on farms or in shops or in mills or anywhere. In view of the conditions in Hawaii and the absolute necessity for Chinese labor, according to the report that has been informally made to me, it is sought by this amendment, or by some amendment that we may be able to approve, to allow a limited number of Chinese laborers to come in to Hawaii.

That will make their coming lawful. Any condition as to their remaining, after they have been lawfully brought in, it is competent for us to provide. We propose to provide as a condition—that is, the Senator does who has offered this amendment, if I correctly understand it—that they shall be brought under certain terms and conditions that will prevent their becoming a charge on that community, and under certain terms and conditions that prescribe what their employment shall be while they are there, namely, that they shall be brought and brought only to work as laborers on sugar plantations and farms where they are needed; and the language of this amendment, as I understand it, is that if after having been so brought they desert their employment or refuse to pursue it they may be deported.

It is not necessary to go into detail in this legislation as to how they shall be deported, because deportation is something with which we are familiar; we already have machinery for that purpose. It is a machinery that operates only when a Chinaman is found who is unlawfully here, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests. But the Chinaman who comes here lawfully on the condition that he will pursue while here a particular vocation and then refuses to pursue it, will be here, after condition broken, unlawfully just as much as though he had come unlawfully in the first place. Then deportation will apply to him, if we so enact, the same as to any other Chinaman unlawfully found here.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I understand——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts and then I shall get in later.

Mr. HOAR. I want to ask the Senator from Ohio whether his committee received this report and considered this particular amendment?

Mr. FORAKER. No.

Mr. HOAR. That is the question I previously put, and I so understand. Now I want——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to say a word in answer to that?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Our committee has not received a report. The report has not yet been fully prepared. I was about to inquire whether it had been prepared as to this point, namely, as to the industrial conditions obtaining at this time in Hawaii.

Mr. HOAR. But as to the legislation in this particular amendment, I understand it does not come with the authority of the Senator's committee.

Mr. FORAKER. No; it does not, because we have not had any opportunity to consider it.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps it is a very old-fashioned notion, but my point is that whatever be right or wrong in regard to dealing with a man who has got unlawfully into this country—and I am not speaking about that now—when you come to take a human being and drag him or carry him against his will 5,000 miles from a place where he lawfully is on the ground that he has broken a contract or that he has no valid excuse for failure to work at a particular occupation, you are violating the fundamental and decent principles of all human justice or law; and it is an outrage to do it without surrounding that transaction with some security for its justice and its propriety. Whether this transaction is so surrounded now the Senator from Ohio does not know, and the Senator introducing the amendment does not know, and the Senate does not know.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator did not allow me to answer that part, and I will do it. I will wait, however, until the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is through.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood the Senator to say that this amendment had its origin in the fact that a subcommittee of the committee of which he is chairman had been appointed to visit Hawaii during the recess to examine conditions, and that those conditions are such that they have given rise to this proposed legislation. It seems to me that it would be fairer to the Senate that that committee should be allowed to formulate its ideas and submit them to us, so that we could examine some of the reasons instead of having one member of the committee rush in, although he tells us that there will probably be opposition from some other member. I say I think it would be fairer to us if this matter was brought in in an orderly way by letting the full committee pass upon the action of the subcommittee so as to get it before us in a proper manner.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. I have another question, but I will not press it now.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to explain the action of the Senator from Kansas, for he has already explained it, and it is not necessary, certainly, for me to defend him against the charge of having rushed in prematurely. The Senator stated that he was loath to introduce this amendment to the pending bill simply because the subcommittee had been unable to prepare and lay before the Senate their report; that he had been holding his amendment back until that report could be laid before the Senate, but had been compelled to offer it now or not at all, because this bill was about to be put upon its passage.

I called attention to the fact, when the bill was about to be reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole, that the amendment had not yet been offered, because the Senator and those associated with him on the subcommittee had told me, quite naturally, I being chairman of the committee, something of what they had found to be the existing conditions in Hawaii, and the necessity for some such legislation as this. I had been told that they contemplated preparing an amendment and having it offered to this bill. I thought that if it was to be offered at all it ought to be offered now; and I called attention to it, because, being chairman of that committee, I feel a responsibility with respect to it.

We ought not to allow the islands of Hawaii to suffer for want of legislation which we may enact, if we find upon consideration that this legislation should be enacted. I am taking no position now as to that, one way or the other, but I feel it my duty, before this matter passes from consideration, to give this proposition a chance to be heard. I should much rather have the benefit of the committee's report, as the Senator from South Carolina suggests; but I do not regard that as indispensable.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to clear up any idea that I am criticising the Senator from Kansas. I have no purpose or desire to pass any strictures upon that Senator's action. He has a right to introduce any amendment he pleases. The only question that presents itself to my mind is that we had up the whole subject of Chinese immigration to the United States proper and to the United States improper, as some of us consider the Philippines, and everything else last spring; we discussed it exhaustively, and I thought any question as to the conditions in Hawaii and the necessities of that insular annex was sufficiently considered then to make it unnecessary for us six months afterwards to rush forward under the claim that there is a terrible dearth of labor in the Hawaiian Islands and that they are about to get into a condition of industrial collapse and all that kind of thing.

It has occurred to me also that there might be other parts of the United States that would want labor and want it now and want it badly, and I do not really see why we should be discriminating in favor of a few corporations which own sugar plantations in the Hawaiian Islands and leaving out of consideration the millions—well, millions is not big enough—of acres of Southern lands that need drainage and need cultivation. I should like to have some explanation as to why these sugar planters in the Hawaiian Islands are such pets of ours that we can not pass a Chinese-exclusion bill at one session but that we must come along and modify it at the next.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to say one word in answer to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. This amendment has no reference to sugar planters, as a class, to the exclusion of other people in Hawaii. It is intended for the benefit of all the people in Hawaii. There are a few sugar planters there, I do not know how many; it is a great industry in the Hawaiian Islands and when it languishes, when sugar plantations can not be conducted except at a loss, and such I understand is the fact now, there is poverty and distress in the whole of the islands; all classes suffer.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then there is another question I should like to ask the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to be permitted to answer that first and then I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is so prolific of ideas in my mind that I must beg his pardon if I respond too quickly.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from South Carolina starts all my ideas.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is the same with me.

Mr. FORAKER. This is not intended for the benefit of any class. It is proposed upon the theory that it will benefit all classes.

Now, what I wanted to say in answer to the Senator, before I quit on that point, is that a few moments ago I asked the subcommittee whether this portion of their report had yet been prepared, and if so, I will now ask that it may be at once printed, in order that we may have the benefit of it before we do act finally on this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I happen to be the chairman of the subcommittee. Only three members of the subcommittee appointed were able to visit the Hawaiian Islands—the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON], the Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER], and myself. Under the authority imposed on us by the resolution of the Senate we investigated quite a number of rather important matters in Hawaii.

A great amount of testimony was taken, some 176 witnesses were examined in all, and a great many memorials and petitions were presented to the subcommittee for their consideration.

Among the subjects investigated was this one of labor in the islands. On that subject we received a great deal of testimony and a number of memorials, petitions, and letters, all bearing upon the question of labor in the islands.

The Senate will see that necessarily a considerable amount of work was imposed on the subcommittee in undertaking to digest the large amount of testimony we brought home with us. It was not convenient for the subcommittee to meet as a whole in Washington until a few days before the meeting of the Senate. We have been diligently at work trying to digest the testimony on the various subjects and in the preparation of what we desire to say to the Senate and to the committee of which we are a part.

There are several subjects that we have completed and acted upon. So far as this particular subject is concerned, it has not been completed; it has been very little discussed in the subcommittee, and only in an informal and perfunctory way. It certainly, so far as I am concerned, has not been decided upon by the subcommittee one way or another, and as chairman of the subcommittee I frankly say to the Senator from Ohio that I am unable to say now what the report of the subcommittee will be on this particular question. That it will be, judging from what has occurred here, a divided report I have no doubt; but on which side there will be two and on which side one I do not yet know.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL. One moment, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. FORAKER. I only want to ask the Senator from Oregon for some information on the point he is just touching upon.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Oregon says the report will, he thinks, be a divided report on that point.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should judge so from what has occurred here to-day.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether he refers to the industrial condition now obtaining or to the question of admitting Chinese labor?

Mr. MITCHELL. I refer to the question of admitting Chinese labor.

Mr. FORAKER. There is no division, I understand, on the industrial condition.

Mr. MITCHELL. I agree that there is at present great industrial depression in the islands.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Oregon permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to inquire whether the committee will take the trouble to enlighten the country as to the wisdom of acquiring territory that can only be rescued from an industrial collapse by an importation of Chinese labor?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a question we have not reached. As I said, I find no fault with the course taken by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON]. He has a perfect right to offer any amendment, as any other Senator has, to any bill which comes up here for consideration. Still, it does seem to me that so far as any action is concerned by the Senate upon this particular proposition as to whether or not it will loosen up the existing legislation on the subject of Chinese and admit them into Hawaii, it should not be decided until, in the first place, the committee of which we are a part, and then the Senate, shall hear what we, as a subcommittee, have to say on the subject.

Now, another thing. The Senator from Kansas states, and his statement is confirmed by the Senator from Ohio, that this is the proper time and place for this proposed legislation. I deny that. The history of legislation from the earliest period of Chinese restriction in the United States shows that legislation in regard to Chinese immigration has always been kept separate and distinct from general legislation on the subject of immigrants.

The question of excluding Chinese laborers because they are Chinese, because of their race, is a question that has never been considered in connection with a general law on immigration, or, if considered, provisions of that character have never been incorporated into legislation which relates to immigration generally.

Therefore I say that the particular subject involved in the amendment introduced by the distinguished Senator from Kansas is one that ought to be considered separately and apart from the bill now pending instead of in connection with it.

Our subcommittee, as I have stated, have not yet considered this particular question, except in a most informal manner, and will not until we have thoroughly digested all the testimony and memorials, affidavits, and letters presented to us relating to this particular branch of our inquiry.

Therefore, Mr. President, it does seem to me that this is a matter that can not be considered now in connection with the pending bill, and that it ought not to be considered now in connection with this bill, but that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas should go to the appropriate committee, of which the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is chairman, and it should there await the report of the subcommittee which has been investigating this matter in the Hawaiian Islands, for our report will be accompanied by an appendix showing all the testimony taken by us, so that the committee will have the full benefit of all we learned on the subject.

While the subcommittee, I presume, under the rules of the Senate, have authority to report directly to the Senate instead of to the full committee, it has been my intention, so far as one member of the subcommittee is concerned, that as to this particular branch of the inquiry at least we should report our conclusions to the full committee; and if I can have my way that will be done, so that the full Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico may look into this question in all its various phases and then report to the Senate their conclusions as to what ought to be done or what ought not to be done in regard to this particular proposition.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, when this bill was being discussed the other day I made inquiry of some of the Senators who have had a great deal more experience than I in this body—and among them the chairman of the committee—and obtained the advice that I would have plenty of time to present this amendment, even perhaps weeks from now. I did not expect to present the amendment until after our report was in. As I said once before to-day, this bill was up and was about to be put upon its passage, and several of the older Senators who knew that I had prepared the amendment suggested that I call it up.

I can not agree with my friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] that this proposed legislation is not germane to the pending measure. This is an immigration bill. In my way of looking at it there is a section of American territory that is in a state of industrial and economic depression; merchants, lawyers, doctors, manufacturers, planters, farmers, all are suffering. There is some cause for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I did not mean to say that the proposition submitted by the Senator is not germane to this bill in the sense of being subject to a point of order, or anything of that kind. What I meant to say, and what I did say, was simply that to place this amendment on the pending bill would be a departure from the policy of Congress upon this subject, for the reason that heretofore and always the policy of the Congress of the United States, when legislating on the subject of Chinese immigration, excluding Chinese on account of their race, has been to deal with it separate from other legislation and independent of it.

Mr. BURTON. I will state to the Senator from Oregon that there is a provision in the bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol.

Mr. LODGE. That was put in in the other House.

Mr. BURTON. At any rate, when we have an immigration bill under consideration, certainly the regulation of Chinese immigration is a proper subject for consideration.

I know, and I think Senators will agree with me, that unless we can have consideration of this amendment on the pending bill it will not be practical to get a law of this kind passed during the present session of Congress.

Let us suppose, for the sake of argument, that this is wise legislation. If it is, then this amendment is properly offered and pressed now. I am perfectly willing that the bill shall go over, and I hope that it will go over, until after our report is in and has been considered by the full committee. The Senator from Oregon will bear me out in saying that I had advised him before now that I had prepared this amendment and proposed to offer it. So it does not come as a surprise to him. Other Senators knew that I wanted this kind of legislation, that I believed in it.

The Senator from Texas says he wants to know whether or not we can subjugate or civilize a country only by Chinese labor. My answer is that we have acquired possessions in the Tropics, and we have acquired possessions that we intend to keep. The Territory of Hawaii is the paradise of the Pacific. It is the crossroads of the Pacific. It is the strategic point of all the trade in that great ocean, and the development of the trade of the Pacific will excel in reality, in my opinion, in the next few years what the wildest imagination now may conceive it to be.

For the last fifty years the better thought of the people of this country has been looking for the possession of Hawaii. The Democratic Administration of Franklin Pierce directed a treaty to be made for the acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands. It is now American territory. Our flag floats over it. The islands are in a state of industrial depression. In a short time, when our report is in, evidence will be presented showing that skilled laborers, the same as planters and merchants, want Chinese immigration, restricted to agricultural purposes. Nearly everybody who lives there wants it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the industrial fabric of Hawaii rest on a condition which requires that there should be some ignorant mudsills there?

Mr. BURTON. I do not know what the Senator means by "ignorant mudsills." I am treating this question seriously, and, if the Senator from South Carolina will pardon me, I do not see exactly how to answer his question.

That Territory is susceptible of great development if we will give those people the aid we ought to give them, because we are responsible for their being under the American flag. If we will aid those people in the way we ought to aid them, it will be a splendid acquisition to this country, and for one I want to help them in every way in my power, and I do not want any parliamentary practice to intervene here that will prevent the passage of legislation which, in my judgment, Mr President, will be beneficial to all the people of these islands.

Now, one word in regard to the Chinese laborers who may be brought there. It is the experience of everybody that it is beneficial to the Chinese who come there and labor for a time and go back; it is to the benefit of those who employ them; it is to the benefit of skilled labor, because there is a great deal more going on when they are there; it is to the benefit, so far as I can see, of everybody to allow Chinese immigration, restricted to the purposes of agricultural labor only.

As to the question the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] raised, about the right to deport under certain circumstances a man who has lawfully been allowed to come on our territory——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me, I raised no such question.

Mr. BURTON. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I wanted to know what was the machinery or method of doing it.

Mr. BURTON. Then I misunderstood the Senator. I thought he intended to raise the question of our right to do that.

Mr. HOAR. I distinctly said I did not raise it.

Mr. BURTON. Very well. Then I misunderstood the Senator. With regard to their deportation——

Mr. MCCOMAS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I listened with interest to the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I also misunderstood him. Will the Senator from Kansas permit the Senator from Massachusetts to state what he did say with respect to the deportation of persons who are aliens.

Mr. HOAR. As I recollect what I said, it was that without discussing or raising the question of right, if we were going to deport a man from a place where he was lawfully found, I should like to know what the mechanism was, the tribunal which would determine whether he had complied with his contract, and so on. That is what I believe I said.

Mr. BURTON. The universal testimony is that the Chinaman who comes to do work in that Territory does the work; that he is commercially honest; that he keeps his contract; that his employer wants to keep him and will keep him as long as he will stay. It is the very best labor that the islands have ever had and the most satisfactory to the employer and to the employee for this particular kind of labor.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him to ask him two or three questions as a member of the subcommittee?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand there is no difference of opinion among the members of the subcommittee on the point that there is an industrial depression in Hawaii from which all classes are suffering.

Mr. BURTON. That is obvious to anybody.

Mr. FORAKER. There is no difference of opinion upon that point. Is there any difference of opinion on this further point that it is due to the lack of labor and that the importation of Chinese would supply that want?

Mr. BURTON. I think it is due——

Mr. FORAKER. What I want to know is whether there is any difference of opinion among the members of the subcommittee?

Mr. BURTON. There is some difference of opinion in regard to that, I will say.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to get at the point whether the difference is as to whether the Chinese ought to be brought in——

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me, I think there is room for considerable difference of opinion.

Mr. FORAKER. I can not hear the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think there is room, under the evidence, for considerable difference of opinion, perhaps, on the question as to whether the real cause of the depression is attributable to the scarcity of labor——

Mr. FORAKER. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. MITCHELL. And from this fact I will state—I am sure the Senator from Kansas will not disagree with me—the census figures show that there are in the islands to-day a fraction over 25,000 Chinese laborers, and that there are in the islands a fraction over 61,000 Japanese, or a total of over 86,000 Orientals.

The testimony shows that the sum total of Orientals, Chinese and Japanese, employed on plantations, in the field, is about 38,000. Deduct 38,000 from 86,000, the total number of Orientals in the islands (and it is a fraction over that), and you have about 48,000 Orientals not on the plantations to be accounted for. Those 48,000 are either engaged in doing nothing, and are therefore a curse to the country, or otherwise they are engaged in vocations requiring skilled labor, and therefore not only coming in competition with skilled labor, but absolutely excluding skilled labor.

Mr. BURTON. I think there is room for disagreement as to what has caused the hard times in Hawaii; but not very much room. I think also that a careful investigation will change the figures somewhat as given by the Senator from Oregon. The Chinese have been leaving Hawaii, and none of them have been coming in, since annexation. The Japanese have been coming in by the shipload, and it is the Japanese who have worked into other callings there to a great extent.

There are some Chinese there who are citizens who can not be deported. They were first citizens of the kingdom, then of the provisional government and the republic, and of course became citizens at the time of annexation. There is a scarcity of Chinese labor for agricultural purposes in the islands, and the Japanese have raised the price, as I said a while ago, to more than the traffic will bear in view of the very low price of sugar.

Again, if the Chinese are admitted for agricultural purposes it will drive the Japanese off the farms and plantations. Everybody says that the Chinese are better laborers and better people for the country.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. It is to make an inquiry. I should like to know if the Senator from Kansas in his inquiries in the islands ascertained whether there had ever been any serious effort to induce immigration into the islands from anywhere else than from China and Japan?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir; there has been a great deal of effort made to get laborers from a great many different places and countries.

Mr. MALLORY. Has there been any effort to secure them from the United States?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir; there has been an effort to get white laborers there, and an effort to get negroes there, and an effort to get Portuguese there, and an effort to get Porto Ricans there.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator why it is that colored laborers of this country, for instance, or white laborers from this country could not go there and compete with other laborers in that country and make a success as agricultural laborers?

Mr. BURTON. I do not know why colored laborers could not work there upon the plantations. I only know that the experiments they have made have been failures. They can not get them to go there and remain upon the plantations or upon the farms. The Porto Ricans that they took there are failures. I think I can safely say that. The Portuguese were measurably a success. The white man will not work in the sun in any tropical country on this globe, in my opinion. The native——

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Before the Senator leaves the point on which he is now, I should like to ask him why the Porto Ricans can not and do not succeed in working in Hawaii? Why is it that they have failed as he says they have failed?

Mr. BURTON. I can not tell exactly, Mr. President. I can not answer the question fully. I do not know that the evidence, when printed, will show that fully, but I can give the Senator my opinion about it.

In the first place, I doubt very much if the best class of laborers were taken from Porto Rico, although the effort was made to get the best class of labor, because it was an expensive thing to those who were employing them. But for some reason they are a complete failure. They did not give satisfaction at all. If you will remember, Hawaii, when it was a kingdom, spent a great deal of money, made large appropriations to bring people from other countries there to try to get the right kind of labor.

If Chinese are permitted to come into that Territory for agricultural purposes only, I believe it will solve the labor question for that Territory. I believe it will not be opposed by skilled labor on the mainland. I believe it will not hurt the cause of labor, because no Senator and no man in this country wants to do anything that will injure the cause of labor. I was going to suggest——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I understand the proposition as formulated by the Senator, and even as considered by the committee, to be predicated upon the condition that the Chinese must be brought in there for a certain purpose, under bonds limiting them to certain kinds of labor?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. The question I desire to ask the learned Senator is this: When you take a man into a country on a bond permitting him to do only a certain kind of labor, under penalty of deportation if he engages in any other kind of labor, is not that a species of bondage? The word "bondage" comes from being under bond. There may be bonds of different kinds; there may be bonds of slavery; there may be bonds imposed by pecuniary considerations; but nevertheless in each case it is a consideration which limits a man's liberty.

Now, I desire to know from the Senator from Kansas, and I hope other Senators who agree with him will enlighten us upon that question, if it is not an approach to the slavery so often denounced here, and properly denounced, and which this country has absolutely repudiated, and with respect to which it has embodied in the fundamental law a declaration that it shall not exist in any manner, shape, or form in any place under the flag of the United States and the jurisdiction of its laws?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think it is any species of slavery whatever. If the Chinaman wants to come to Hawaii, he knows before he comes that he can come there and perform a certain kind of work. He is permitted to come for that purpose and that only. It remains with him to decide whether he will engage in that kind of work in Hawaii. If he does, he elects to do it as a free man, and agrees to go away if he does not do it.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will allow me, he elects to become a bondsman.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, no.

Mr. FORAKER. The bond is nothing more nor less than an undertaking on the part of the employer that if the employee deserts the employment for which he is brought there, the employer will see that he is deported without any expense to the government.

Mr. BURTON. It is in no sense slavery, nor can it be tortured to mean that.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Kansas a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Is not the man to be brought there by somebody else? Is there any security that it is not pure cooly labor, brought over from China without the consent of the laborer when he starts? The phrase of the bill is——

Mr. BURTON. There is nothing in the amendment that speaks about how he is to come there.

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. BURTON. The question is the employment when he comes.

Mr. HOAR. That is my exact proposition—whether there is anything in this measure such as we used to have in our old labor laws and have now to a large extent in our immigration laws, to prevent the taking over there of cooly labor, pure and simple?

Mr. BURTON. I will say to the Senator that if the amendment does not cover that fully, I have no objection at all to any kind of an amendment that may be drawn, or this amendment may be changed in any way, to prevent laborers being brought into the country in that way.

Mr. HOAR. Then the amendment possibly needs further amendment. The phraseology of it is that the persons or corporations in whose service said Chinese agricultural laborers have been engaged shall give a good and sufficient bond, etc., to defray the deportation of such Chinese.

Now, my question is a pretty serious one, as the Senator recognizes by the seriousness of his answer. Is the Senator now prepared to assure the Senate that if this amendment passes, cooly labor, pure and simple, being the taking against their will from China, where it is permitted by the Six Companies or anybody else, of a number of laborers and carrying them over to Hawaii will not be employed?

Mr. BURTON. If the amendment were adopted, would not the general immigration laws apply, so as to prevent anything of the kind being done? I ask the Senator as a lawyer.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me I should ask the Senator as a committeeman if he knows whether it will or not. The Senator's amendment should not be adopted unless the gentlemen on whose recommendation we take it know that and do not have to inquire.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator's answer, of course, is clever.

Mr. HOAR. Well, it is all I can answer. I do not know. I have not in my head at this moment, as a lawyer or in any other way, the memory of the detail of our existing laws so that I can tell the Senator the answer to the question I have put to him. I ought to know, but I do not.

Mr. BURTON. I will ask the Senator if the present immigration laws do not prohibit the bringing of contract labor into any part of American territory?

Mr. HOAR. I do not know whether or not it includes Hawaii.

Mr. BURTON. It certainly includes all parts of our territory.

Mr. HOAR. This amendment certainly proposes their coming into Hawaii, while our law and the proposed law with which we are dealing prohibits the admission of any man under any contract to labor. So, if that law now applies to Hawaii, this amendment is absolutely nugatory, because nobody can come in under a contract to labor.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not the purpose of the amendment——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me a moment's interruption?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. It has been stated here two or three times that no one has read this amendment except only the Senator who offered it. No one has had any opportunity to study its language. A great many questions have been asked, and one, a very important one, just now by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], I think we would all feel better satisfied in our consideration of it if we could now suspend the further consideration of the bill and let it all go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask one more question of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. FORAKER. Then the amendment can be printed and we can have it before us.

Mr. HOAR. With the leave of the Senator from Ohio, I should like to put a question to the Senator from Kansas before he drops the subject for to-day, if he has no objection.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Committee on Immigration, in charge of the bill, would like to say something before this movement is carried through.

Mr. FORAKER. I have the floor, and I yielded to the Senator from Massachussets to ask a question.

Mr. HOAR. It will take only a moment.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I want to ask the Senator from Kansas whether if these precise conditions at any time should be found to exist in any part of the United States, namely, that there is an agricultural or other business depression, caused by a scarcity of labor, and the price of laborers who can be got is so great that you can not manufacture or carry on your farm at a profit, and the community want it, would he be in favor of admitting Chinese labor to any part of this country?

Mr. BURTON. No.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. Then are you doing to Hawaii as you would be done by?

Mr. BURTON. Yes. I will answer the Senator. The white man will labor on the mainland and he will not in Hawaii.

Mr. HOAR. Put him in a case where he will not.

Mr. BURTON. I understood the Senator to ask whether if we had a scarcity of labor on the mainland I would favor Chinese immigration for agricultural purposes.

Mr. HOAR. In Louisiana, for instance.

Mr. BURTON. No; because the labor can be supplied by Anglo-Saxon or other white men. But it can not be so supplied in Hawaii. The labor in the fields in Hawaii will never be supplied by the native Hawaiian or by the white man. It will be performed either by Chinese or Japanese. It will be performed by Orientals. Notwithstanding that the Hawaiian is a native there; notwithstanding that he makes the finest kind of a laborer in many directions, such as longshoreman, and is a splendid worker in the mills, and as a fisherman, and performs labor in many other fields, he will not go out and work in the sun in the cane field and on the farm. So the question is whether, if they are to have labor of this kind there at all, it shall be performed by Chinese or Japanese. That is the practical question. It matters not what legislation you enact or whether you enact any legislation at all or not, the work of the plantation will either be performed by Chinese or Japanese.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Kansas permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. What does the Senator say to a proposition which declares that a human being may come to a certain country and remain there as long as he pursues the cheapest labor, but the moment he aspires to rise to a condition higher than that of the cheapest labor, he must be expelled as unfit to reside there? It occurs to me that that is a strange kind of doctrine in this age, where every tendency is to uplift the laborer, to make the unskilled laborer's child of to-day the skilled laborer of to-morrow. That is my theory of dealing with the labor question; and I will never consent to vote that a man can stay in this country as long as he pursues but the cheapest and least skilled of employments, and that the moment he aspires to become a skilled laborer he must be deported under the provisions of a law like this.

Mr. BURTON. That is because the political policies of the distinguished Senator are provincial. It is because he did not favor the acquisition of Hawaii. He did not favor the acquisition of the Philippines. He does not favor the acquisition of any tropical country.

Mr. TILLMAN. He does not favor slavery.

Mr. BURTON. Therefore he is in favor of a certain rule that is applicable only to people who live in a temperate zone. Now, if the Senator can show me that the Chinaman who would be permitted to come there to perform agricultural labor is injured in any way instead of being benefited; if he can show me that skilled labor is injured in any way by his coming, and if he can show me that labor in any way is injured by the Chinaman being permitted to come there for that purpose, then I shall be ready to withdraw this amendment. But until he can do that I think a fair investigation will force the conclusion upon everybody that it is to the benefit of the Chinaman who is allowed to come, and who wants to go away after staying a limited number of years, and it is to the benefit of the men who are building houses, who are building manufactories, who are building mills, and who are trading, and who are growing cane, and who are growing or want to grow coffee, pineapples, rice, and other products. It is to the benefit of everybody and to the injury of no one except that it comes in conflict with a preconceived political theory; that is all.

Now, Mr. President, I have said very much more than I expected to say. Indeed, I did not expect to say anything on the subject at this time.

Mr. BAILEY. One more question, if the Senator will permit me.

I have an idea that the early settlers of New England and the later settlers of some of the Southern States did the African a distinct good when they caught him in the jungles of his native country and brought him to this country and put him in slavery, but I hardly think the Senator from Kansas or any other Senator in this Chamber would argue that in extenuation of slavery to-day. I have no doubt that a Chinaman in the less thickly settled islands of Hawaii would be somewhat better off than he would be in the densely settled Kingdom of China.

I am not one of those who have always professed friendship for labor. I have not always been able to support the demand of the advocates of labor. I have never been able to support the eight-hour law, which denies a citizen of the United States the right to contract for his personal services, and I never will. But I do think that I am as sincere a friend of labor as any good citizen can conscientiously be, though I may not be such a good friend as some profess to be.

However, what I object to is the moral, or rather the immoral, feature—the writing in a statute book of this country a law that condemns an unskilled laborer to be unskilled forever, which says to them as long as they will work for a cheap wage and at a vocation so laborious and so burdensome that the people who are native in that country will not, as the Senator admits, pursue it, so long as these people brought there will pursue that vocation which none others will take up, they can remain: but the moment they lift their eyes to a higher plane of labor that moment they must be banished under a deportation law. I never will consent to write that kind of a law against the labor employed in any part of this country.

Mr. BURTON. The comparison the Senator makes is a complete answer to his argument. In the first place, we did go to the jungles of Africa and we bound some and brought them to this land. We are not going to China to bind anybody to bring here. So the comparison is not a comparison, but a contrast.

Under this amendment the Chinaman would come here of his own free will, and he would come permitted to do only a certain kind of work. The African came here because he was captured and forced to come and was then put into slavery. What comparison could anyone except the learned Senator from Texas make between the existing condition of things in the old régime and this proposed amendment?

Now, Mr. President, as I said before, answer this question: Does not the Chinaman get a distinct benefit if you allow him to come? He does not want to stay. He will not stay. He wants to come and engage in a certain kind of work for a term of years and go back. He of his own volition contracts to come and to do certain work, just as much as any laborer is employed to do any specific kind of work. The only difference is that we say he shall not come unless he will contract to do only that specific work.

Now, he can stay in China if he wants or he can come, and he will come, as he wants to come, because it is a benefit to him to come and a great blessing to allow him to come. It is an improvement to the Chinaman. He carries back to his country something of a knowledge of our wise laws and our better civilization, and the employer, instead of being mean to the Chinaman, instead of being small with him, wants to keep him, because he is commercially honest. He wants to keep him because he does keep his contract. He wants to keep him because it is beneficial both to the employer and to the employed.

Now, Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee if he is not willing that this bill shall go over, so that this amendment may be considered in connection with the bill? We can not hope to get this kind of legislation enacted during the present session unless we can have it considered in connection with the pending bill. Since that is true, and since it is perfectly apparent that the bill which is being considered will pass—I do not mean my amendment, but I mean the bill generally—and since it does not endanger its passage, I ask the chairman if he is not willing that the bill shall go over until such time as the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico can consider it and report so that we may have a better consideration of this amendment?

I know all Senators will acquit me of any purpose to suddenly inject this amendment into the bill or to take any snap judgment on anybody. I am earnestly in favor of this legislation. I believe it is necessary for one of our American Territories, and I see that this is the only practical way to get it during the present session.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Immigration, I could not favorably consider the request of the Senator from Kansas a moment, nor do I think any member of that committee would do so, because in my opinion this amendment does not belong in the bill. Whether it is theoretically germane or not I will not attempt to argue; but, as a matter of fact, Chinese legislation has always been kept separate and distinct from other general immigration legislation. It does not belong here and it is evidently premature. I would suggest——

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator speaks of general Chinese legislation. This is not general Chinese legislation. It relates only to one Territory of the United States.

Mr. PENROSE. It should come in the form of an amendment to the Chinese-exclusion law, which was passed at the last session of the present Congress. It does not belong in this bill, which is general immigration legislation, and to attempt to put it in is to depart from the universal practice of Congress, which is not to mix up the two kinds of legislation.

The amendment is evidently premature. The committee has not reported it. The committee is apparently divided upon it.

When the Committee on Immigration had this question up in reference to the restricted admission of Chinamen in the Philippine Islands and in the Hawaiian Islands they decided not to let down the bars. As late as last spring, in the opinion of the Committee on Immigration of the Senate, it was thought better to delay the development of the Philippine Islands and the Hawaiian Islands rather than to let down the bars for the admission of Chinamen even under restriction. As far as that committee is concerned, therefore, it has already taken a position against such an amendment, and no evidence has been submitted to it to alter its opinion.

I move, Mr. President, that this amendment be laid upon the table, so that when the Senator's committee is ready to report he can bring it up or introduce an amendment to the Chinese-exclusion act to carry out the purpose he has in mind. I therefore make the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes have it. The ayes have it. The amendment is laid on the table.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment to page 3, line 16. There the bill defines who are anarchists. I want to suggest an amendment in line 16, that after the word "violence" there be inserted "of any government, of the Government of the United States, or" so that it may read:

> Polygamists, anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of any government, of the Government of the United States, or of all government.

A man may come here who will say, "I have advocated the overthrow by violence of a czar or of a king," but, he may say, "I have never advocated the overthrow by violence of the head of a republic." I suggest that those words are very helpful, and I hope the chairman will consider the amendment favorably.

Mr. PENROSE. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator yield that I may move an executive session?

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the amendment carefully reported. I think the amendment goes farther than the Senator himself intends, if the Senator will hear it.

Mr. PENROSE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 6, after the word "violence," insert the words "of any government, of the Government of the United States or," so that, if amended, the paragraph will read——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me to call his attention to it, he certainly, I think, on reflection, will not wish to retain the words "of any government," because there are governments in the world that ought to be overthrown by force or violence. What does the Senator say as to the government of the Moros at this moment?

Mr. McCOMAS. I think that that remote insular proposition need not be interpolated in a definition of the propagandist of anarchy by violence.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know that I, as a member of the Senate of the United States, want to particularize all the governments; we may be on very friendly relations with them; but there are governments in this world that I for one would overthrow by force and violence very quickly if I could.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts having disposed of the Moros——

Mr. HOAR. Suppose the Senator makes it read, "the Government of the United States or of all government."

Mr. McCOMAS. In order to get substantially the amendment that I want accepted I will leave out the words "or any government," although I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. CULLOM. Pending that amendment, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withhold his motion.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator will allow us to get a reprint of the bill and not cut us off at this stage to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois withdraw his motion?

Mr. McCOMAS. I make the point of order that I had not yielded the floor. I suspended that the Secretary might read the amendment just offered, and I submit that the Senator from Illinois can not take me off my feet in the midst of the reading of the amendment. If the Senator will bear with me for a moment the amendment will be disposed of.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will bear with me, I will desist from attempting to make the motion at this moment.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will modify my suggestion to the chairman of the committee so as to insert in line 16, after the word "violence," the words "of the Government of the United States or."

Mr. PENROSE. It will then read, "of the Government of the United States or of all government." There can be no objection to that amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 16, after the word "violence," insert the words "of the Government of the United States or;" so as to read, if amended:

Polygamists, anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all government or of all forms of law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. I now ask for a reprint of the bill, with all amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the bill be reprinted with all the amendments. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 10, 1902, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 9, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CUSTOMS INSPECTORS AT PORT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (S. 215) regulating the duties and fixing the compensation of customs inspectors at the port of New York was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to increase the compensation of inspectors of customs at the port of New York as he may think advisable and proper, by adding to their present compensation a sum not exceeding $1 per day, which additional compensation shall be for work now performed by them at unusual hours, for which no compensation is now allowed, and shall include work performed by said inspectors at night in examining passengers' baggage, and also as reimbursement for expenses incurred by them for meals and transportation while in the discharge or performance of their official duties.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCCLELLAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RECORDING OF LEGAL INSTRUMENTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I ask the Clerk to read.

The bill (H. R. 7956) providing additional districts for the recording of all instruments required by law to be recorded in the Indian Territory was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That each place where a court of record is now held in the Indian Territory shall be a recording district, with jurisdiction to record all instruments permitted or proper to be recorded under the laws now in force in said Territory. The deputy clerk in charge of said court shall keep in his office all necessary books of record for the purpose of recording said instruments. The same fees shall be allowed said deputy clerk for such services as are now allowed the clerks of the recording districts in said Territory.

The deputy clerk at each place of holding said court shall be, and is hereby, made the ex officio recorder thereof. Said three recording districts now existing are hereby continued, but their jurisdiction is hereby limited to the actual limits of the jurisdiction of the court held in their respective districts. The new recording districts hereby created shall have jurisdiction over all of the Territory covered by the jurisdiction of their respective courts.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs was read, as follows:

At end of bill add the following:

"The judges of said respective courts shall immediately after the passage of this act define, by an order duly entered on their court dockets, the boundaries of each recording district herein provided for, and shall also make all orders necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act—and chapter 27 of the Digest of the Statutes of Arkansas, known as Mansfield's Digest of 1884, is hereby extended to the Indian Territory, so far as the same may be applicable and not inconsistent with any law of Congress: Provided, That the clerk or deputy clerk of the United States court of each of the courts of said Territory shall be ex officio recorder for his district and perform the duties required of recorder in the chapter aforesaid, and use the seal of such court in cases requiring a seal, and keep the records of such office at the office of said clerk or deputy clerk.

"It shall be the duty of each clerk or deputy clerk of such court to record in the books provided for his office all deeds, mortgages, deeds of trust, bonds, leases, covenants, defeasances, bills of sale, and other instruments of writing of or concerning lands, tenements, goods, or chattels; and where such instruments are for a period of time limited on the face of the instrument they shall be filed and indexed, if desired by the holder thereof, and such filing for the period of twelve months from the filing thereof shall have he same effect in law as if recorded at length. The fees for filing, indexing, and cross indexing such instruments shall be 25 cents, and for recording shall be as set forth in section 3243 of Mansfield's Digest of 1884.

"That the said clerk or deputy clerk of such court shall receive as compensation as such ex officio recorder for his district all fees received by him for recording instruments provided for in this act, amounting to $1,800 per annum or less; and all fees so received by him as aforesaid amounting to more than the sum of $1,800 per annum shall be accounted to the Department of Justice, to be applied to the permanent school fund of the district in which said court is located.

"Such instruments heretofore recorded with the clerk of any United States court in Indian Territory shall not be required to be again recorded under this provision, but shall be transferred to the indexes without further cost, and such records heretofore made shall be of full force and effect, the same as if made under this statute.

"That wherever in said chapter the word 'county' occurs there shall be substituted therefor the word 'district,' and wherever the words 'State' or 'State of Arkansas' occur there shall be substituted therefor the words 'Indian Territory,' and wherever the words 'clerk' or 'recorder' occur there shall be substituted the words "clerk or deputy clerk of the United States court.'

"All acknowledgments of deeds of conveyance taken within the Indian Territory shall be taken before a clerk or deputy clerk of any of the courts in said Territory, a United States commissioner, or a notary public appointed in and for said Territory.

"All instruments of writing the filing of which is provided for by law shall be recorded or filed in the office of the clerk or deputy clerk at the place of holding court in the recording district where said property may be located."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for additional districts in the Indian Territory for recording all instruments necessary to be recorded there. At present there is but one place in each nation where instruments may be recorded. We are placing upon the market town lots and alloting lands among the Indians of that entire country, and many deeds are being made by the United States Government to the Indians and purchasers of town lots. Many commercial transactions are made in that country evidenced by written contracts that require recording, and it is a very great hardship upon the citizens there to have only one place of recording in each Indian nation. For instance, Ardmore, one of the places of record at present, is situated about 150 miles by railroad from every point upon the Rock Island Railroad, and citizens now have, in order to record a deed or mortgage, to travel 150 miles, and there are two places of holding court on that road. This bill simply provides that at every place where a court is held in that Territory, that place shall also be a place of record, and that the boundaries of that place of record shall be the same as the jurisdiction of the court at that particular place, and the judges of the court are required to define, by an order entered in the minutes of their courts, the boundaries of each recording district.

Mr. PAYNE. How many new places of record does it give, practically?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As many as there are places of holding court, and I do not remember the exact number. There are but five at the present time, as I understand it.

Mr. PAYNE. Is this recording officer paid by fees, entirely?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. So that there is no additional expense to the Government of the United States?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. None whatever. It simply provides additional facilities by which the citizens of the Territory may have their legal instruments recorded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report back House resolution No. 340, for the distribution of the President's message.

REPORT.

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred House Resolution No. 340, for the distribution of the President's message, report the same back without amendment and recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to call it up for consideration?

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I desire at this time to give notice that I shall attempt to call it up after the conclusion of the special order to-morrow.

The resolution, with the accompanying report, was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ADJOURNMENT OVER THE HOLIDAYS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I also report back the following resolution, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, December 20, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, January 5, 1903.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred concurrent resolution No. 61, for adjournment over the holidays, report the same back without amendment and recommend its passage.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 15804) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and, together with the accompanying report thereon, ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order.

LONDON LANDING CHARGES.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota demands the regular order, which is the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9059) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, before taking up the bill for consideration, I wish to state that I have just received a telegram from Representative OLMSTED, of Pennsylvania, who on Saturday last gave notice that he would call up the Butler election contest resolution to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal. For the information of the House, I will ask unanimous consent that I may read the telegram, so that the members may understand that it will not be possible for him to do so.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

Mr. TAWNEY read the telegram, as follows:

HARRISBURG, PA., December 9, 1902.

HON. JAMES A. TAWNEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Chill early this morning. High temperature later, now going down. Doctor won't let me travel to-day. Thinks can possibly leave here to-morrow morning 9 o'clock, reaching House of Representatives about 2. Will that do for Butler case? Would prefer putting over until Thursday, if satisfactory all around. Doctor says can surely be there then. Please have somebody wire me.

M. E. OLMSTED.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is recognized on the bill H. R. 9059—the London dock bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, since the consideration of the bill which is now before the House the Senate has passed a bill identical in form, purpose, and language to the bill under consideration. If this bill should pass the House, it would go to the Senate and would there have to be considered the same as the bill which is now in the House and has already passed the Senate.

I therefore desire to make this parliamentary inquiry, first stating that it is my purpose to move to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. My parliamentary inquiry is, at what stage of the proceedings, or of the consideration of the pending bill, would it be competent for me to make that motion—at this time, or at the close of the debate on the present bill?

The SPEAKER. If the House were in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, we should have a division between general debate and debate under the five-minute rule; but we are proceeding under the morning hour. There is no five-minute rule and there is no general debate, unless by unanimous agreement. It seems to the Chair that the bill is up for consideration, and that any motion can be made that is proper under the parliamentary law of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. At any time during the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees no other method.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that before the conclusion of the general debate I shall move to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, and in that way avoid the delay incident to the final passage of this measure which would necessarily follow if the House passed this bill. In that case each House will have passed the bill, but one or the other would have to pass it again before it could become a law.

Before addressing myself to the bill under consideration, I desire to say that when the special order was adopted on Saturday for the consideration of this bill, it was agreed by the House that the division of time should be arranged between the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] and myself; and I wish to state, for the information of members, that we have agreed that the time shall be divided equally, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] to control the time on behalf of the negative, and myself on behalf of the affirmative side of the question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, of course that means that you are to count on your side the time that you have already occupied.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; the arrangement between the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] and myself is that the time for debate to-day is to be divided equally between the two sides.

Mr. HEPBURN. You have jockeyed my friend then to that extent.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is impossible. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this division of time will be recognized by the Chair.

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if the time for the vote on this bill has been fixed.

Mr. TAWNEY. Half past 4 o'clock.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important measure and there is a very general and widespread demand for its enactment into law. The conflict of interest which has led to the somewhat strenuous controversy over the passage of this bill is between the North Atlantic steamship companies and the export interests of the United States. The American exporters and business men generally have testified to their desire to have this bill enacted into law, through numerous commercial organizations and boards of trade. These organizations have adopted resolutions and forwarded the same to the members of this House and to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, some of which are printed in the hearings on this bill before that committee.

For the information of the House I will say that some of these organizations urging the passage of this bill in this manner are the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, the Duluth Produce Exchange, the Chicago Board of Trade, the Kansas City Board of Trade, the St. Louis Merchants' Exchange, the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce, the Winter Wheat Millers' League of the United States, the Millers' Club of Minneapolis, St. Louis, and Kansas City, and the Michigan State Millers' Association. All of these organizations represent a very large proportion of the business men of the United States engaged in the exportation of American products to the port of London.

In addition to these resolutions I have here a petition, signed by the great packers of the city of Chicago, urging the passage of this measure. Inasmuch as the grounds upon which these packers petitioned this House for the passage of this bill are practically the same upon which the commercial bodies referred to have adopted their resolutions, I will read the petition of the packers of Chicago, who represent practically all of the exporters of meat products of this country.

CHICAGO, February 13, 1902.

To the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives:

The undersigned packers and provision dealers in the city of Chicago respectfully represent that for many years they have been subjected to unjust discrimination by virtue of what is known as the "London clause" being incorporated in the bills of lading issued by steamship companies operating between the United States and London, England.

The undersigned respectfully beg to urgently protest against the continuance of this action on the part of shipowners who have been, and now are, inserting special clauses in bills of lading whereby products manufactured by us are subjected to charges in direct contravention of acts of Parliament which guarantee free landing for such products into the port of London.

The undersigned further object to, and protest against, any form of bill of lading which contravenes the intent and purpose of said acts of Parliament, whereby the city of London was made a free port; and we beg to suggest such amendment to the Harter Act of 1893 as will restrain shipowners from inserting in their bills of lading clauses by which the shippers of the United States are practically compelled to contract themselves out of the freedom of the port of London.

The undersigned also object to the imposition upon them by shipowners of the restrictions and disabilities now enforced by the bill of lading at present in use, for the reason that the clauses inserted and used to their detriment are unjustly discriminative, being exclusively applied to shipments from this country, while similar products shipped from Russia, Australia, and other countries are exempt therefrom, to the very serious injury and detriment of the export trade of the United States, which is thus deprived of the advantage of free delivery into barges, which is enjoyed by its foreign competitors in the city of London.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to ask the gentleman if those firms are the firms that are popularly known in the United States as the beef trust?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am unable to answer the question of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to state for his information that I hold telegrams from these companies whose statements he has quoted in favor of this bill, withdrawing their support of the bill and stating that, in their judgment, its passage would be very injurious to American trade.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman may have telegrams of that kind, as there are members of this House who hold telegrams from another exporting interest of the United States, received quite recently, withdrawing their support of this bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. What interest is that?

Mr. TAWNEY. The National Lumberman's Export Association. I have had telegrams within a week from the officers of this association, first wanting to withdraw their support, next denying they had withdrawn their support, and then again withdrawing their support; and I have a letter from one officer which may explain why they have now finally withdrawn their support.

Mr. BURLESON. Read it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will print these telegrams and the paragraph from the letter I referred to as a part of my remarks.

In this letter, dated November 10, the author says:

I will state to you confidentially that the ocean carriers have approached us in several ways with the idea of having us withdraw our support and to call off our friends in Congress, so that the bill may be defeated. * * * The reason I give you in confidence the last maneuver of the steamship people is because I do not think this is just the proper time to spring it on them.

After serious consideration our members have decided that passage of bill H. R. 9059 would be very prejudicial to their interests. If we can honorably withdraw it is our desire to do so, but I want your telegraphic advices before final action. This message has been kept strictly secret.

ERNEST M. PRICE,
President National Lumber Exporters' Association.

To this last telegram I sent the following answer:

WASHINGTON, December 4, 1902.

ERNEST M. PRICE,
President National Lumber Exporters' Association, 18 Broadway, New York City:

Impossible to withdraw bill. What change has occurred at London or in steamship methods to reverse effect of passage of bill on your interests?

I wired him last night to correct same. If they have not yet received same, please show them this telegram.

ERNEST M. PRICE,
President National Lumber Exporters' Association.

BALTIMORE, MD., December 9, 1902.

Hon. J. A. TAWNEY,
Riggs House, Washington, D. C.:

I am now instructed by my association, confirming my previous telegrams, to wire you as follows: Withdraw support our association to bill 9059, provided, in your judgment, we can do so consistently with our relations with the millers' association. If your decision is favorable to such a withdrawal, the association requests you to notify all our friends in House.

ERNEST M. PRICE.

To the gentleman from Illinois I will say that I said the paragraph in the letter referred to was confidential, but the author of the letter informed me that the only reason he desired it to be regarded as confidential was because he did not think that was the proper time—November 10—to "spring" the fact stated in the letter on the steamship companies.

But, Mr. Speaker, independent of whether the packers of Chicago and the National Lumber Exporters' Association have withdrawn their support of this measure or not, independent of any consideration of whether or not special privileges may have been granted by the steamship companies to the lumber exporters, the question for this House to determine is not whether this or that interest has withdrawn its support and now repudiates all arguments it has heretofore made and denies the existence of facts it has heretofore urged in favor of the passage of this bill, but whether or not the bill is right and should be enacted into law. That question addresses itself to the good sense, intelligence, and mature judgment of the members or this House after a thorough investigation of the facts as disclosed by the testimony presented to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce by the steamship companies and by the American exporter.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make it unlawful for steamship companies to incorporate in their bills of lading certain clauses whereby they impose upon the American exporter or upon the cargo owned by the American exporter the payment of certain charges for the doing of that which by the law of Great Britain at the port of London they are required themselves to pay. If all of the steamship companies transporting cargo to the port of London included this clause there would still be objections to it for reasons which I will explain later, but they do not. It is only steamship companies carrying cargo from the Atlantic ports of the United States and Canada that use this so-called "London clause" or that make the charge covered by this clause in addition to the charge for transporting the cargo from North Atlantic ports to the port of London.

This bill does not contemplate the first exercise of the power which Congress has in the matter of regulating bills of lading, one of the most important instruments of foreign commerce. It is not a departure from any previous act of Congress. It contemplates merely an amendment to a law known as the Harter Act, enacted by Congress in February, 1893. The Harter Act provides "that it shall not be lawful for the manager, agent, master, or owner of any vessel transporting merchandise or property from or between ports of the United States and foreign ports to insert in any bill of lading or shipping document any clause, covenant, or agreement whereby it, he, or they shall be relieved from liability for loss or damage arising from negligence, fault, or failure in the proper loading, stowage, custody, care, or proper delivery of any and all lawful merchandise or property committed to its or their charge."

The act then provides that clauses of this nature, if inserted in bills of lading, shall be null and void, and suitable penalties are imposed for the violation of the act.

Prior to the enactment of this law these same steamship companies were imposing upon the American exporter by compelling him to accept a bill of lading containing clauses which would exempt the steamship companies from any common-law liability for damages sustained by the consignee or consignor in consequence of the negligence of the steamship company, its agents, or servants. The bill under consideration does not change this law in the least. It simply adds to that part of the act which I have just read a further provision making it unlawful also for the steamship company to incorporate any clause in their bills of lading that will exempt them from the payment of those charges or that expense connected with the landing of the cargo which, by the laws of the country to which the goods are shipped, is imposed upon the shipowner or shipmaster. It is true this bill is general in its terms, but in effect, if it becomes a law, it will apply to only one port in the world—the port of London—and will make it unlawful for the steamship companies carrying goods from the United States to the port of London to incorporate in their bills of lading what is to-day known as the "London landing clause."

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this subject is one with which the members of this House who are not members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have had very little opportunity to consider or obtain information upon, it is important that I should state what this clause is and say something concerning its history, the charges covered by it, and its effect upon the export trade of the United States to the London port. The best evidence of what the clause is is the clause itself, and inasmuch as it is comparatively brief, I will read it:

London clause (A).—The steamer owners shall, at their option, be entitled to land the goods within mentioned on the quays or to discharge them in craft hired by them immediately on arrival and at consignee's risk and expense, the steamer owners being entitled to collect the same charges on goods entered for landing as the docks as on goods entered for delivery to lighters. Consignees desirous of conveying their goods elsewhere shall, on making application to the steamer's agents or to the dock company within seventy-two hours after the steamer shall have been reported, be entitled to delivery into consignee's lighters at the following rates, to be paid, with the freight, to the steamer's agents against release, or to the dock company, if so directed by the steamer's agents, viz: Following wooden goods in packages:

Clothes pegs, spade handles, blind rollers, hubs, spokes, wheels, and oars, 1s. 3d. per ton measurement; hoops, 2s. 9d. per ton weight; lumber and logs, 2s. per ton measurement or 2s. 6d. per ton weight, at ship's option. All other general cargo, except slates, 1s. 9d. per ton, weight or measurement, at steamer's option; minimum charge, 1 ton. Slates to pay 2s. per ton weight. Cheese may also be removed by consignee's vans within one week after ship shall have reported, subject to a like payment of 3s. 3d. per ton weight, such sum to include loading up and wharfage. Any single article weighing over 1 ton to be subject to extra expense for handling, if incurred. All measurement freight to be on the intake calliper measurement, as stated in the margin. Freights by weight (grain excepted) to be paid upon the weight stated in margin or at steamer's option upon landing weight. If weight has been understated, the cost of weighing to be a charge upon the goods. All shipments of lumber and logs which are sent forward on a weight rate will pay freight on the railroad weights furnished at the port of shipment. No alteration will be permitted in any weight or freights included in this bill of lading except at steamer's option.

(b) Grain for overside delivery is to be applied for within twenty-four hours of steamer's docking, or thereafter immediately it becomes clear. In the absence of sufficient consignee's craft, with responsible persons in charge, to receive as fast as steamer can discharge overside into lighters during dock working hours, the master or agent may land or discharge into lighters at the risk and expense of the consignee. The steamer owners may land or discharge continuously day and (or) night any grain landed or discharged for ship's convenience during dock hours, consignee's craft being duly in attendance, and any grain that may be landed or discharged before or after usual dock hours (whether craft are then in attendance or not) is to be given up free to consignee's craft applying for same within seventy-two hours from its landing or discharge; otherwise it will be subject to the usual dock charges. An extra freight of 7d. per ton shall be paid to the steamer owners on each consignment of grain whether any portion be landed or not, the grain to be weighed at time of discharge, either on deck, quay, or craft, at steamer's option. Working-out charges (including weighing) for grain in bulk and (or) steamer's bags to be paid by the consignee with the freight to the steamer's agents, or to the dock company, if so directed by the steamer's agents, in exchange for release, at the rate of 1s. 9d. per ton on wheat, maize, and heavy grain, 1s. 11d. per ton on barley, and 2s. per ton on oats. Neither party shall be liable for any interference with the performance of the contract herein contained which is caused by strikes or lockout of seamen, lightermen, or shore laborers, whether partial or otherwise, nor for any consequences of such strikes or lockout; but in such case the steamer owners shall be entitled to land or put into craft at the risk and expense of the consignee. In case the grain shipped under this bill of lading forms part of a larger bulk, each bill of lading to bear its proportion of shortage and damage, if any.

These London clauses "a" and "b" are to form part of this bill of lading, and any words at variance with them are hereby canceled.

Craft which are in attendance for delivery under above clauses and stipulations shall wait, free of demurrage, their regular turn to receive goods or grain as required by steamer owners, either from steamer or quay or captain's entry craft.

The steamer owners shall have the same lien, rights, and remedies on goods or grain referred to in the above clauses or under any other clauses of the bills of lading as they have by law in respect to freight.

Hay, illuminating and lubricating oil clause.—Consignees to have craft in attendance immediately on steamer's docking to take delivery from steamer or quay at steamer owner's option, working continuously day and (or) night, paying in any case 1 shilling 3 pence per ton weight, or otherwise the goods will be put into captain's entry craft at consignee's risk and expense.

The above clause overrules anything in the body of this bill of lading at variance therewith.

Notification clause.—Also no claim shall, under any circumstances whatever, attach to the steamer or her owners for the failure to notify consignees of arrival of goods.

From this it will be seen that these steamship companies, in addition to the freight received by them for transportation of the cargo to the port of London, receive from 1 shilling 9 pence to 3 shillings 3 pence per ton. What service in addition to carrying the merchandise do they perform in consideration of the payment of this 1 shilling 9 pence on flour? I speak of flour because that is the principal export from the State which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor. Last year almost one-quarter of all the flour exported from the United States was exported from that great milling center of the world, the city of Minneapolis. This charge is to compensate the steamship companies for doing what? For delivering the merchandise at the port of London to the consignees. This, I venture, is the only instance where common carriers include in their waybills or bills of lading clauses covering charges or expenses incident to the unloading of the cars or the vessels or placing the merchandise where it can be conveniently obtained by the consignee. It is comparatively recent that this clause has been inserted in bills of lading for the transportation of merchandise from the United States to the port of London.

Until 1888 the consignee or the cargo did not have this charge to pay. Until that time the expense incident to the unloading of the vessel was paid by the steamship owner out of the freight received for the transportation of the cargo from American ports. The labor incident to the unloading of their vessels up to that time was, for their convenience, performed by the London and East India Docks Company. For that service the docks company charged the steamship company, and the steamship company paid this charge, as by the law of Great Britain it is compelled to do to-day, and will have to do to-day if we make it unlawful for it to incorporate this clause in its bill of lading whereby it transfers the obligation imposed upon it by the law of Great Britain to the exporter of the United States.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman explain what he means by using the term "delivery?" Does he mean cartage?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; delivery on the quay or dock or unloading the ship and sorting the cargo for the consignee, either on the dock or overside into the lighter.

Mr. LAWRENCE. If the gentleman from Minnesota will allow me, I have seen a statement made, perhaps in the minority report, that the charge is not made for transportation of goods from the vessel to the dock, but for the special care of the cargo after it is on the dock.

Mr. TAWNEY. The best evidence of what this charge is made for is contained in the clause itself. I will not quibble with the minority or with the steamship companies as to what this London landing clause covers; it speaks for itself. Now, the first clause that was adopted in 1888 was very simple, and is very different from the clause that is in force to-day. The original London landing clause reads as follows:

The shipowners shall be entitled to land these goods on the quays of the dock for the steamer discharges immediately on her arrival, and upon the goods being so landed the shipowners' responsibility shall cease. This clause is to form a part of this bill of lading and any words at variance with it are hereby canceled.

Now, at that time it was for their own convenience in the landing of their cargoes that they incorporated this clause giving them the right to land the same on the quays or dock and there was no charge made originally for that. Then there is a note—

N. B.—Delivery into lighters—and I will say here that 76 per cent of all cargoes that go to London is landed into lighters, either direct or over the quay or the dock to the lighter. One of these docks, the Tilbury dock, is 30 miles from the wharf houses of London, and the other, the Victoria and Albert, is 7 miles from London. Necessarily the cargoes are transported up the River Thames by means of barges and lighters and craft of that kind.

N. B.—Delivery into lighters: Consignees desirous of conveying their goods elsewhere shall, on making application to the dock company within seventy-two hours after the steamer's report (instead of twenty-four hours, as previously), be entitled to delivery into lighters at the following low rates: Grain, rice, flour, coffee, oil cake, sugar in bags, cotton seed, bacon, beef, and pork (not canned), one-half; other goods in packages, 1s. 6d.; deals and lumber, 2s., all per ton of 2,240 pounds.

(This rate was afterwards increased to 1s. 6d. per ton.)

Now, the London clause of to-day is altogether different from the one first used. Then it imposed no charge for landing on the quay or dock. Then if they chose to do so it was for their convenience and the expense thus incurred in landing the cargo was paid out of the freight, but this is not so under the present London clause. Now they compel the shipper to bear this expense in addition to the freight, as will be seen from Clause A, which I will read:

(A) The steamer owners shall, at their option, be entitled to land the goods within mentioned on the quays, or to discharge them in craft hired by them, immediately on arrival, and at consignee's risk and expense, the steamer owners being entitled to collect the same charges on goods entered for landing at the docks as on goods entered for delivery to lighters. Consignees desirous of conveying their goods elsewhere shall, on making application to the steamer's agents or to the dock company within seventy-two hours after the steamer shall have been reported, be entitled to delivery into consignee's lighters at the following rates, to be paid with the freight to the steamer's agents against release, or to the dock company, if so directed by the steamer's agents, viz:

And then it goes on to enumerate the various items of merchandise and the rates per ton for the delivery or the landing of that merchandise from the hold of the ship onto the quay or dock, or over side into the lighter.

Mr. Speaker, this matter has been considered and passed upon by the English Parliament, and not very long ago—in 1894—the merchant shipping act was amended. That act now provides as follows:

If at any time before the goods are landed or unshipped—

Mark the language—

If at any time before the goods are landed or unshipped the owner of the goods is ready or offers to land or take delivery of the same, he shall be allowed to do so; and his entry shall, in that case, be preferred to any entry which may have been made by the shipowner.

Now, mark this:

4. If any goods are, for the purpose of convenience in sorting the same, landed at the wharf where the ship is discharged, and the owner of the goods, at the time of that landing, has made entry and is ready and offers to take delivery thereof, and to convey the same to some other wharf or warehouse, the goods shall be assorted at landing, and shall, if demanded, be delivered to the owner thereof within twenty-four hours after assortment.

Thus it will be seen that, according to the law of Great Britain, the consignee has twenty-four hours after the goods are sorted and piled within which to obtain the same free from any charge except the freight charge.

And the expense of and consequent upon that landing and assortment shall be borne by the shipowner.

Now, these steamship companies that use this London landing clause are, as I am informed, with one exception, incorporated under the laws of Great Britain. The reason for that was stated by their representative before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. When asked by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] why they incorporated under the laws of Great Britain, he answered by saying that it was because it was more profitable for them to do so, and to sail under the English flag than to sail under the American flag. He also admitted that practically all the stockholders were American stockholders.

Now, here is the law of Great Britain protecting the consignee, and thereby directly protecting the exporters of the United States, and both are deprived of that benefit by these English corporations transferring the obligation to pay these charges imposed upon them by the law of the country under whose flag they sail to the American exporter. The expense incident to this landing and sorting is, at common law, a part of the contract of the carrier, and should be paid out of the freight; but the statute of Great Britain, in addition to that, imposes this charge directly upon the shipowner. And how do the shipowners evade it? By incorporating in the bill of lading—into the contract of shipment entered into with citizens of the United States—a clause which compels the consignee to pay the charge for unloading or landing the cargo in addition to the freight.

The inland shipper has no means whatever of knowing what clauses there are in the contract of shipment from the seaboard. A gentleman from Milwaukee, Mr. Madgeberg, when before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, read to the committee that clause which is contained in the inland bill of lading. I read from the testimony of Mr. Madgeberg, on page 38 of the hearing:

We, under a clause in our bill of lading that inland shippers must take or take nothing, contract ourselves out of the right which we would have otherwise on the other side of the water under the act of Parliament which prohibits any charge except the freight charge for delivery at or over the rail. This clause is as follows:

"Also, that the property covered by this bill of lading is subject to all the conditions expressed in the approved forms of bills of lading used by steamship companies at the time of shipment, and to all local rules and regulations at the port of destination not expressly provided for by the clauses herein."

So that the inland shipper is not only at the mercy of the carrier; he must either accept such bills of lading as the steamship companies may present or not export his goods at all, and when he receives his bill of lading from the inland carrier he has no means of knowing what obligation the ocean bill of lading may impose on his merchandise in respect to the delivery thereof at the port of London, and in addition to the freight he agrees to pay. It is absolutely within the arbitrary power of these steamship companies to make this landing charge anything that they see fit to make it. They have increased it from 1 shilling 2 pence to 1 shilling 9 pence, and they undertook less than a year ago to increase it to 2 shillings on flour, and were prevented only because of the storm of protests from the importing merchants of the city of London.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, as to what the volume of American flour was which was exported to London in 1888 at the time the landing clause was first inserted.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am unable to answer the gentleman in respect to the amount of American flour exported to the port of London. I will say, however, that I am informed that the statement made in a minority report that there was only about 178,000 hundredweight of flour imported at the port of London in 1900 from all other countries is a mistake. My information is there was 1,100,000 hundredweight imported from Australia alone.

Mr. WANGER. Will my friend permit me another question? Has not the number and capacity of steamers engaged in the business of carrying American products to London been multiplied several times over since 1888?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know whether they have been multiplied several times over. I know they have materially increased in number.

Mr. WANGER. And in capacity.

Mr. TAWNEY. And their size and capacity have been increased, as I believe every stockholder of every steamship company knows that it is more to their advantage and profit to carry a large cargo than it is to carry a small one. I do not see how that is any argument that should appeal to the representatives of American shippers in favor of their incorporating a clause in the bill of lading providing for charges which, when added to the freight, makes an exorbitant freight charge.

Mr. WANGER. If it had become desirable to ship American products to the port of London, is there not a substantial reason for it?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; there is a substantial reason for it, and for the information of the gentleman and of the House I will read a paragraph from Choate's report, which shows what the substantial reason for this landing clause is.

In giving evidence before the Royal Commission on the port of London May 6, 1901, Mr. Scott, who is the president of the London and East India Docks Company, says in reply to Sir John Wolfe Barry:

Q. Under the conditions of the Northern American trade, the shipowner has done his work when he puts the cargo on the quay?

A. Yes; but the shipowner under the North American bill of lading by his bill of lading is entitled to make a charge for doing that, and there is a considerable amount of profit hanging on to that, so that the shipowner is anxious to put it on the quay.

That is the substantial reason for incorporating the London landing clause in the bill of lading. It is the profit they make under the clause that prompted them to insert it, and this profit they enjoy in addition to the profit realized out of the freight paid by the shipper.

Mr. WANGER. But if this charge was oppressive, would it not tend to the diminution of exports to that port instead of to their multiplication?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not necessarily. Let me answer the gentleman by giving him a few facts. Last June or last spring the export millers of Minneapolis attempted to ship their flour to the port of London without this additional freight charge. They shipped to London via New Orleans, and the steamship company carrying their flour did not incorporate in its bill of lading this clause imposing upon the cargo an extra charge for unloading and landing the cargo. What was the result?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption? Is it not a fact, and if it is a fact, why is it, that the exports from the United States and Canada are the only exports which are charged this extra money for being taken off the ship?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will wait a moment I will reach the point of discrimination.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it a fact that they are so charged?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a fact. If this charge is made by any other steamship company in the world except the North Atlantic lines it is paid out of the freight by the steamship companies. I want to show to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] just how the American exporter is trying and has tried to get American exports into that port of London on an equal basis with like exports from other parts of the world, and then he can answer his own question as to the effect of this extra charge upon American exports. I have said that the Minneapolis millers commenced shipping their flour to London via New Orleans by a steamship company running directly from New Orleans to the port of London, and in that steamship company's bill of lading there was no landing clause. There was no clause imposing an additional charge for unloading the vessel either on the quay or overside into the lighter. On the 9th of June, my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] received the following telegram from Washburn-Crosby Company, of Minneapolis, the largest export millers in the United States:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., June 9, 1902.

Hon. LOREN FLETCHER, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Just received cable from London stating certain London steamship lines attempting to force Cuban steamship line from granting flour receivers free overside delivery. We had chosen New Orleans route and Cuban steamship line in an attempt to avoid London landing charge, but you can see from this the desire on the part of the other London lines to cut off every chance of our entering London without paying landing charge. We hope you will be successful in the passage of the Harter Act, which will adjust this abuse. Have written full particulars.

WASHBURN-CROSBY COMPANY.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how did these Atlantic steamship companies attempt to prevent this Cuban line from carrying American exports without using a bill of lading such as they demanded?

First they went to the proprietors of the Cuban steamship line themselves—and I have this upon the authority of the man who conversed with the officers of that line—they first threatened them and endeavored in every possible way to induce them to incorporate the London clause into their bill of lading, but they were refused. What did they do next? They went to the dock company and threatened to build wharves farther up the river if the dock company did not compel the Cuban line to adopt the North Atlantic bill of lading, and then the dock company demanded of this steamship line that it incorporate the London landing clause in its bill of lading, otherwise it would have difficulty in getting suitable facilities for unloading its vessels at that dock. It was also stated that means of delay in handling its ships and cargo would be found if this demand was refused. It was under these circumstances, as I am informed, that the Cuban line was finally obliged to compromise and did compromise by charging against the cargo half the amount charged by the North Atlantic steamship companies under the London landing clause for landing the cargo.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman mean to inform the House that, after all, the London dock companies are the parties who control this situation?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I do not mean to say that they——

Mr. HEPBURN. They did in this instance.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman mean to ask whether they control the situation with respect to this clause?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the North Atlantic steamship companies demand it, as they did in this instance, then the London Dock Company is strong enough to compel any smaller line to agree to the concession demanded.

Mr. HEPBURN. What authority has the gentleman for saying that the London Dock Company compels the New Orleans steamship line and does not compel the North Atlantic steamship lines?

Mr. TAWNEY. To do what?

Mr. HEPBURN. To pay these charges; to insert this provision.

Mr. TAWNEY. The North Atlantic steamship companies inserted this provision originally for their own benefit and convenience, and the testimony of the president of the dock company, which I read a moment ago, explains that the benefit is the added profit they derive. How was it inserted? Up until 1888 the dock company unloaded the vessel. The dock company paid the expense incident thereto and collected it from the steamship companies. The charge of the dock company for this service was 10 pence per ton. From 1888 down to 1890, even after this London clause was adopted by the North Atlantic steamship companies, the dock company continued to unload the steamships of the North Atlantic steamship companies as theretofore, and continued to charge them this 10 pence per ton. What did the steamship companies during that time charge the cargo or the consignee under this clause? One shilling 2 pence, realizing, after paying the dock company for doing the work which the steamship companies are now doing, a net profit of 4 pence per ton. Speaking of this phase of the matter, our ambassador to England, Mr. Choate, in his report on it, says:

For a considerable period prior to the introduction into the bills of lading of the London clause, the steamship companies discharging cargo on the dock quays (including the North Atlantic lines) had been paying the dock companies for flour at the rate of 10 pence (20 cents) per ton, which they bore themselves, without any attempt, so far as I have been able to learn, to put the whole or any part of it upon the owners of the cargo.

Mr. WANGER. When you say——

Mr. TAWNEY. Just one minute. Now, let us see. The north Atlantic steamship companies have entered into a combination for the purpose of inserting in their bills of lading, and insisting upon its acceptance by the consignor, this "London landing clause." The dock company, of course, has more power in the matter of handling the docks than these steamship companies, because the former has complete control of the docks and the landing of vessels, but it is nevertheless true that to a very great extent the dock company is under the influence and can be controlled by these North Atlantic steamship lines. Hence, when the latter failed to induce the Cuban Line, carrying Minneapolis flour to the port of London, to incorporate their "London landing clause" in its bills of lading, they secured the interposition of the dock company by threatening to withdraw their business and erect wharves of their own. Why? Because they know that the dock company has complete control of the docks and wants their business and can seriously embarrass shipowners in the matter of landing and unloading their vessels, without denying their legal right of entry, without denying them the right of a berth for their vessel or any other legal right, thereby causing steamship companies like the Cuban Line serious delay and a great deal of extra expense; so that rather than submit to this embarrassment and loss, as I am informed, the Cuban Steamship Company finally agreed to a compromise with the dock company by paying one-half of the amount paid under this "London clause" by the consignees to the steamship companies sailing from North Atlantic ports. Therefore the millers of Minneapolis and the Southwest as well are obliged to pay this landing charge or not ship their flour to London as the result of this North Atlantic steamship combination.

Mr. WANGER. When you said the dock companies charged 10 pence per ton, you meant for goods removed within twenty-four hours?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; within twenty-four hours after they were unloaded, sorted, and piled.

Mr. WANGER. But if they were not removed within twenty-four hours, then the charge was very much higher, was it not?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. WANGER. And the steamship companies got an extension of the twenty-four-hour period to seventy-two hours, did they not?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. WANGER. In order that there might be an additional time for unloading?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and the consignees at London say that that extension of time is of no advantage to them whatever, because under the law and prior custom of the port the consignee has twenty-four hours after the goods are landed on the quay, or docked, sorted, and piled, to come and get them, without any additional charge to him, while under the present arrangement the seventy-two hours commence to run when the steamer is reported at Gravesend. If the dock company makes any charge for the time that the goods remain after they are sorted and before the expiration of the twenty-four hours, the steamship companies, under the law of Great Britain, must pay whatever that charge is.

Again, it is claimed that these North Atlantic steamship companies have extended the time for the consignee to obtain his goods from twenty-four to seventy-two hours, but, as I have said before, this statement is misleading. The seventy-two hours' time commences to run when the steamer is reported—that is, when it is reported at Gravesend—and it is eight, twelve, and sometimes eighteen hours thereafter before the vessel reaches the dock. Here is practically one-fourth of your boasted seventy-two hours gone. Then, in addition to this, the wharves and docks are always crowded. A ship comes up and unloads on the quay. While unloading another is waiting, and before the consignee of the goods of the first ship has an opportunity to obtain his goods the other ship has dumped its cargo on top or in the way of the first one, so that it frequently happens that there is a delay of from one to three weeks—aye, more than a month—before the consignee is able to obtain all his goods. The seventy-two hours having elapsed, the dock charges attach and must be paid. It is for this reason that the consignees at London claim that this extension of time is of no practical benefit to them.

When I was interrupted a moment ago I was about to read from Mr. Choate's report, showing why the American exporter is absolutely within the arbitrary power of these steamship companies in the matter of increasing freight rates on American exports by increasing the landing charge provided for in the "London landing clause." Mr. Choate says:

> The notice issued by the combined steamship companies on the 26th of November, 1900, by which, from the 1st of January, 1901, the rate of dock charges on flour was raised from 1s. 6d. to 1s. 9d., well illustrates the method of which the shippers and importers complain. The entire body of North Atlantic lines running to London, without consulting the shippers and consignees from whom the extra charge is exacted or giving them a chance to be heard, issue a joint notice raising the rates. This increase is unrestrained by any possibility of competition, and is imposed by the mere will of one of the parties to the contract, upon the plea that the increase only represents a portion of the extra outgoings, and will, they think, under the circumstances, be considered reasonable; but if unreasonable, the shippers and consignees have no means of resisting it.

From this we see that this landing charge covered by the "London clause" was arbitrarily increased from 1s. 6d. to 1s. 9d. per ton. Arbitrarily, without notice to the consignees or consignors, and without opportunity to be heard as to the reasonableness of the charge, the increase was effected by the combined action of these North Atlantic steamship companies. And we also observe from this statement of Mr. Choate, and from the practice of these steamship companies, that this and all other increases in this charge "is unrestrained by any possibility of competition and is imposed by the mere will of one of the parties to the contract."

This illustrates very forcibly the methods by which the freight rate upon American exports to the port of London can be increased and the opportunity which this "London clause" affords these steamship companies to thus arbitrarily increase to an unreasonable extent these rates, and the absolute helplessness of the American exporter to resist such arbitrary increase.

Again Mr. Choate says:

> The owners of these great steamers found it cheaper to pay themselves the cost of the use of the quay and the labor thus done by the dock owners in the delivery of the cargo to barges than to incur the loss consequent upon long detention of their valuable steamers while discharging overside. Of course there is a mutual convenience and advantage as between ship and cargo in the quick discharge of the latter; but it is claimed by the merchants that from causes over which they have no control, in the arrangements in the docks, there is no considerable benefit accruing to them in the way of quick delivery—that the goods come out of the ship fast enough, but do not reach their hands any earlier than they would if discharged overside.

From this you will see, gentlemen, that it was merely for the convenience and benefit of the steamship companies, and not for the benefit of the consignor or consignee, that this method of discharging and collecting was adopted. Of course there is to a certain extent a mutual convenience and advantage as between a ship and cargo in having it quickly discharged, but it is claimed by the merchants and by those who control the docks that there is no considerable benefit accruing to the consignee in the matter of quickening the delivery of the goods by having them discharged on the quay out of the ship or discharged overside. If, for the convenience of a shipowner, they are discharged into lighters by way of the quay or dock, this, as Mr. Choate in another part of his report says, is merely using the quay or dock or extending the deck of the ship to the extent to which the quay or dock is employed for that purpose. In the event that the quay or dock is thus employed by the shipowner, the merchants' shipping act of Great Britain expressly provides that—

> If any goods are, for the purpose or convenience in assorting the same, landed at the wharf where the ship is discharged, the same being ready to take, deliver, and carry them elsewhere, the goods shall be assorted at landing and shall, if demanded, be delivered to the owner thereof within twenty-four hours after assortment, and the expense of and consequent on that landing and assortment shall be borne by the shipowner.

It is this charge which the bill under consideration provides shall not be included in the bill of lading for two reasons. First, because it is a part of the carrying charge and should be included in the freight and thus open to competition; and second, because by the law of Great Britain this charge is imposed upon the shipowner or the shipmaster.

Again Mr. Choate says:

> We accordingly find that until the introduction of the London clause into the bills of lading of the North Atlantic lines running to London, in April, 1888, and since then in all other trade, all such expenses in that port have been paid by the shipowner. It comes out of the freight, as all expense of discharge and delivery has always done.

Mr. Speaker, if this bill passes and becomes a law, and these steamship companies are not allowed to embody this special clause in their contracts of shipment or bills of lading, thereby imposing upon the cargo the expense of unloading the vessel, what will happen? The steamship companies tell us they will simply add the amount of this charge to the freight, and what, they ask, is the difference? The cargo must pay it in the end. Our answer is, first, that there is where this charge belongs. It is made by the steamship companies now, in addition to the freight for the doing of that which the ocean carrier by his contract, in the absence of this clause, is bound to perform in consideration of the amount received for carrying the cargo, and by the statute of Great Britain they are bound to pay for. While it may be true that at certain periods when there is a large amount of freight to be carried, and consequently a large demand for vessel space, the freight could be so increased as to cover this landing charge, but when cargo is scarce and in demand, competition between the ocean carriers would absorb this landing charge, and the American exporter would then get the benefit for this part of the freight charge, being then in competition with ocean carriers, as well as the rest of the freight charge. On the other hand, if, when competition for freight was strong and these steamship companies added this landing charge, which on flour amounts to 42 cents a ton, or 3½ cents per barrel—more than the miller's profit—the steamship companies say themselves that it would make the published freight rates between New York and London appear so high as compared with the published rates between New York and Liverpool, a competing point, that competition would be invited, and that this competition would result in a material reduction of the published freight rates between New York and London.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the very reason why the steamship companies should be deprived of the opportunity of segregating a part of the freight rate, taking it out of competition and making it a fixed charge, and it is the reason, too, why the American exporter to the port of London is demanding the passage of this bill, for it will then be unlawful for these steamship companies to divide the expense of carrying cargoes to that port, leaving one part of it open to competition and making the other part a fixed charge.

Mr. Choate, in his report, well states the position of the American exporter and the London consignee when he says:

> What the merchants claim is that the freight should pay the cost of discharge and delivery of the cargo, as it has done from time immemorial in the absence of special agreement; that if the freight is not sufficient to cover this, the freight should be enlarged instead of imposing an extra landing charge, so that when the mill owner in Minnesota or the consignee in England sells the flour at a price based upon cost, insurance, and freight, both parties may understand exactly what they are doing. Under the present method of charge this 1s. 9d. landing charge is not regarded as between buyers and sellers as part of the freight.

Another reason why the American exporter asks for the passage of this bill is the fact that this charge of 42 cents a ton on flour, for example, for the cost of handling it until actually delivered to the consignee's barge, when added to the freight for carrying the cargo, results in an exorbitant freight charge for the carrying and unloading of American merchandise at the port of London. This is shown by a comparative statement of the freight rates on flour from New York to London, Liverpool, and Glasgow during the year 1900, when ocean freights were abnormally high. A statement of these rates, taken from page 134 of report of the New York Produce Exchange, 1901, I will publish as a part of my remarks.

Comparative freight rates per ton on flour from New York to London, Liverpool, and Glasgow during 1900.

[Taken from p. 134 of Report of New York Produce Exchange.]

Monthly average.	London.	Liverpool.	Glasgow.
	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
January	14 4½	12 6	11 3
February	15 11½	15 0	14 4½
March	16 8½	14 9	14 0
April	16 6½	14 8½	13 9
May	17 2½	13 1½	12 9½
June	15 0	10 1	12 3
July	13 9	9 0	10 11½
August	16 10½	13 9½	14 4½
September	21 3	15 0	16 3
October	18 1½	14 0½	15 7½
November	17 6	10 7½	14 4½
December	17 0	9 1½	13 4½
Total	200 3	154 9½	163 4½
General average for year	16 8½	12 10½	13 7½
Or in American money	$4.16½	$3.21½	$3.40

When analyzed in connection with the landing charge at the port of London, we see how the freight to London is increased.

Landing charge (flour)	$0.42
Total charge to London	4.58½
To Liverpool	3.21½
Excess	1.37
Total charge to London	4.58½
Total charge to Glasgow	3.40
Excess	1.18½

In the case of a vessel of 14,000 tons this excess amounts to $19,180 over Liverpool and $16,590 over Glasgow.

	Miles.
New York to London	3,740
New York to Liverpool	3,540
Difference	200
New York to London	3,740
New York to Glasgow	3,375
Difference	365

Therefore, in the case of a vessel of 14,000 tons, this London landing charge amounts to $5,580, or that is the amount in addition to the freight which these steamship companies receive for landing the cargo either over side into lighters or on the quay or dock, at the rate of 1s. 9d.

It may be said that because this bill is general in its terms it will apply to every port in the world, and that inasmuch as we do not know the conditions governing the landing of cargo at any other port than the port of London that we might by the passage of this measure seriously jeopardize our commerce to these other foreign ports.

As I said in the outset, the bill is general in its terms, but it is specific in its application in that it provides that it shall be unlawful to incorporate in any bill of lading a clause imposing upon the consignee or consignees the payment of any port, harbor, dock, landing, elevating, weighing, or sorting charges "the payment of which is, by the laws, statutes, or customs of a foreign country or countries to which such merchandise or property shall be transported, imposed on such manager, agent, master, or owner or any persons or agencies other than the consignee or the consignees thereof." It was conceded before the Senate Committee on Commerce and before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that there is only one port in the world where it is known that the charges covered by the "London clause" are by the law of the port or the country in which the port is situated imposed upon the shipowner or the shipmaster. Therefore, while the bill is general in its terms, it would apply to no other port in the world except the port of London. The best evidence of this is the fact that in no bill of lading for the carrying of American goods to any other port in the world is there a clause covering these or like charges.

Mr. Speaker, there is another fact which I wish to call to the attention of the House. It is with respect to the discrimination against American exports at the port of London which the use of this "London clause" creates. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] a few moments ago inquired if these landing charges included in the "London clause" were made against consignees receiving goods from other ports except North Atlantic ports. They are not. There is no steamship company in the world carrying exports from any country to the port of London that adds by clauses in its bill of lading a specific charge for the landing and delivering of the cargo to the consignees at the port of London except the steamship companies sailing between North Atlantic ports and that port. In the other cases the expenses incident to the unloading or landing of the cargo are paid by the steamship owner out of the freight which he receives for the carrying of the cargo.

Here is a clear discrimination against American products at this port and in favor of like products from other countries, and this discrimination operates as a restriction upon American commerce destined for the port of London, because it favors the exporter of like products from other countries to the extent that the charges included in this "London clause" are absorbed in the competition between carriers from all other ports to the port of London, while on merchandise coming from North Atlantic ports to that port these landing charges are fixed and arbitrary and are always made in addition to the freight paid for the transportation of the goods.

On this point Mr. Choate, in his report, says:

As to discrimination, whatever discrimination there is, arising from the system of charge complained of, is not against the United States alone, but against the United States and Canada, the Canadian steamship lines having adopted the "London clause."

There is undoubtedly a discrimination as against flour from the United States and Canada in favor of flour coming to London from all other parts of the world. Flour is brought to London from many other parts of the world and is landed and delivered from large steamers in much the same way, and whatever cost attaches to this mode of delivery is paid by the shipowners out of the freight, no such clause as the "London clause" having been adopted.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that, independent of every question, independent of every other fact in favor of the passage of this bill, the fact that the use of this London clause operates as a discrimination against American products at the port of London is sufficient to justify the enactment of this bill into law by an American Congress.

Mr. BELLAMY. Is there any demand for the insertion of this clause in the bills of lading by the exporters of grain or the producers of grain?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that there is. Grain is unloaded overside entirely. It does not go on the quay or on the dock. Now, the charge being in addition to the freight, and it being for a service the carrier is bound to perform under his contract to carry and reimburse himself for the expense out of the freight, we are not asking anything unreasonable when we say the charge should be put where it belongs—in the freight. If they can segregate this item of freight from the published freight rate, thus showing a lower rate than the rate actually is, they can segregate some other item and put that in a special clause, and thus practically prevent competition in carrying between New York and London, if they can, as they have in respect to this London clause, form a combination for that purpose.

Now, the two competing points in England are Liverpool and London. If to the published ocean freight rates—rates which are always published—from the various North Atlantic ports you add 42 cents a ton on flour, you will see exactly what the effect would be.

From the statement of the average freight rates to which I referred a few moments ago, it appears that the average rate between New York and London in 1900 was $4.16¼ without the London clause; to Liverpool, $3.21½; to Glasgow, $3.40 a ton. Now add 42 cents a ton to the London rate and you have $4.58½ a ton, or $1.37 a ton more freight on flour to London than to Liverpool.

Mr. MANN. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. TAWNEY. A statement taken from the comparative freight rates on flour from New York to London, Liverpool, and Glasgow for 1900, from page 134 of the report of the New York Produce Exchange.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentlemen know what the rate is now?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is very much less now.

Mr. MANN. Less than one-half?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; but that does not change the principle.

Mr. MANN. It changes the facts.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, it is a fact; but it does not change the principle.

Mr. MANN. It changes the whole application of the principle.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; if the gentleman will pardon me, there is no reduction in the London landing charge, is there, except to increase it?

Mr. MANN. No; there is no change in that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Has the gentleman ever known any change except to increase it since it was adopted?

Mr. BINGHAM. But the freight has been reduced.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; but the London dock charge has never been reduced.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota knows that the freight to London with the London dock charge is less than the rate to Liverpool.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not. The same relative proportion between the rates to Liverpool and London exists to-day that existed in 1900.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. I say the same relative proportion. Now, you add 42 cents a ton to the published freight rates from New York to London and this freight rate will seem so high as to invite competition. That is why they do not want to put the London landing charge into the freight, because it would invite competition in the carrying of freight between New York and London.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman himself believes that, or he would not state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. If this charge is incorporated as a part of the freight it becomes as much a matter of competition between the carriers as the carrying charge is, and the gentleman will admit that our salvation as exporters depends upon our ability to keep freight charges in competition with carrying companies, does he not?

Mr. MANN. It depends on our ability to get cheap rates.

Mr. TAWNEY. How can you do that without competition?

Mr. MANN. We have now the cheapest freight rates in the world.

Mr. TAWNEY. How are you going to maintain them without competition? The great English vessels that in 1900 were engaged in carrying traffic from Europe to South Africa since the close of Boer war are again engaged in the carrying trade between the North Atlantic ports, and to a very large extent that has lowered ocean freights. Are we not entitled to have all the charge for carrying our goods put into competition in order that we may get as low rates as possible?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants me to answer, I say that it is our duty to get the cheapest possible rates——

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and here is a restriction upon our opportunity to do that. As Mr. Choate says, there is absolutely no competition in the matter of this landing charge at the port of London.

Mr. CANNON. May I ask a question purely for information? I do not claim to understand this question fully, though I have been listening as carefully as I could. As I understand, this special provision in the charter party to London does not apply to Glasgow or Liverpool?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. It applies to the landing at London. Now let me see whether I understand the matter. If a charter party were made for transportation of goods from the United States to London, and if it stopped there, these charges, the dock charges the gentleman speaks of——

Mr. TAWNEY. They are not dock charges; they are landing charges.

Mr. CANNON. Well, these landing charges would have to be paid by the steamship company?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir; in the absence of this special agreement.

Mr. CANNON. I mean that if the charter party were simply from New York or Chicago to London and stopped there, these charges that the gentleman objects to would have to be paid by the steamship company. Therefore the steamship company, by a special stipulation, relieves itself from that which it would be obliged to pay; and the object of this bill is to prevent the steamship company from so relieving itself.

Mr. TAWNEY. Exactly; the object is also to compel them to obey the laws of the country under which they are incorporated.

Mr. MANN. That is their duty, I suppose.

Mr. HULL. I have been trying to get some information on this subject. It was asked a few moments ago why these charges were not included in the freight charges, and the gentleman answered because it would invite competition. Now, I suggest to him that these peculiar charges are known by all the transportation lines; and why are not the companies now just as much liable to competition when the charge is imposed in this way as if it were added to the freight? There is no secret about these charges; they are well known. I understood the gentleman to say that if these charges were included in the freight, the freight would appear unduly high.

Mr. TAWNEY. The freight from New York to London as compared with the freight to Liverpool would appear so high as to invite competition.

Mr. HULL. But every shipper practically knows that these dock charges are imposed in the bill of lading as an additional charge. Now, I can not see the difference, so far as competition is concerned, between putting them in in this way and putting them directly into the freight. I would like to have this matter explained.

Mr. TAWNEY. The steamship companies that use this clause run between North Atlantic ports and the port of London, and by a combination between them have all agreed to this London clause, a means of compelling the cargo or consignee to pay these charges in addition to the freight, so that the amount of the freight charge covered by this clause is not in competition between them. The clause is not employed by any steamship company in the world except these North Atlantic lines. This charge is not even imposed when goods are shipped from the Pacific coast. Goods going from San Francisco to London do not pay this charge.

Mr. HULL. But it is put in the freight.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is put in the freight, or the expense of doing the work is paid out of the freight. But flour, for example, coming from Australia goes into the port of London without the payment of these charges.

Mr. HULL. In other words, they are put in the freight.

Mr. TAWNEY. Whatever expense there is incident to the unloading of the vessel is paid out of the freight by the shipowner. So it is in every port in the world.

Now, the London landing clause is put in the bills of lading from the North Atlantic ports, as I have said, by a combination or agreement between the shipowners. If an independent steamship line were organized that did not add the expense of landing the cargo to the freight and collect the same by a special clause, as the North Atlantic steamship lines do, the latter would immediately attempt and, as they have in the past, would succeed in forcing such independent lines into their combination for the imposition of these landing charges in addition to the freight and the collection thereof by the "London landing clause" incorporated in their bill of lading or force them out of business entirely.

Hence there is no opportunity for the American exporter to be relieved from this additional burden on his exports to the port of London than by Congress making it unlawful for any steamship company to incorporate in its bill of lading a clause for the payment of that which by the law of the country to which the goods are shipped is imposed upon the shipowner or the shipmaster, and which at common law the shipper is entitled to have paid out of the freight he pays for the transportation and delivery of his goods at the port of destination.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman prefers to proceed further now, I have no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not care to proceed further at this time, although I have been interrupted so frequently that I have had no opportunity to follow the line of remark that I had intended.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire, then, to yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], my colleague on the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. One moment, if the gentleman pleases. I should like to know how much time the affirmative side has left, as there are two or three members of the committee who favor this bill and would like to be heard.

The SPEAKER. That side has one hour and five minutes remaining. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] yields how much time to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. SHERMAN. As much time as he desires.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, as the time is limited, I wish, for the accommodation of others, to yield back as much time as possible, and to consume as little as possible myself. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to appear as the champion of either side in this controversy. I have very little pride of individual opinion about this question. I do not know anything about the charges and countercharges which have been made in regard to the two trusts that are represented as engaged in this titanic struggle. If there be a flour trust or a shipping trust, or any other number of trusts, neither I nor the school of politics to which I belong in this country are responsible for them.

I would be willing to stamp out both or all and allow commerce to be free and untrammeled by any conditions, beginning at our own ports, rather than commence tinkering with small matters at foreign ports. I concurred in the minority report and failed to vote with the majority on the committee, because those advocating the bill failed to convince my mind that there was either necessity or reason for its enactment.

I understood at first that some lumbermen were clamoring before our committee for the passage of the bill, but upon examination it appeared that the proponents of the bill were composed exclusively of flour men. The distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] concedes that the lumbermen are either out or in—he does not exactly know which—and whether they say they are out or say they are in, he seems to have satisfied himself that he has successfully impeached them, and if he can manage to do the same for the flour interests we will be rid of both, and there will be no demand for this measure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my first objection to the bill is that it seeks to curtail the liberty of contract and say that an American citizen, at the demand of one interest in our great and magnificent commerce, shall be prohibited, under pains and penalties, from making any contract, not only as to domestic affairs—which would be odious enough—but as to foreign transactions, which would affect our vast commercial relations and interests—interests so great and grand that they should ramify every ocean and bring back boundless profits from every port of the earth to our people. In the second place, I oppose the bill for the reason referred to—that it is supported by one interest alone.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman passes from the first proposition, I desire to ask him a question. I desire to know if his position is that great corporations, like carrying companies, ought not to be limited in their power to make contracts with shippers to the damage of the shippers.

Mr. ADAMSON. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it has not been my good fortune since I have been in politics to be permitted to say effectively what I think ought to be done as to great corporations. I was coming to the phase of the case to which the gentleman's question relates, on the question of competition——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Pursuing the question further, if that does not meet the gentleman's approval, I desire to know whether he is opposed to legal regulations limiting contracts which a carrier of freight or passengers may exact from the shippers.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will be in favor of taking off all shackles from commerce, beginning at home, and encourage competition in this as in all other lines; and I declare here and now that if the trouble at the port of London were all that interfered with the wealth and prosperity of our commerce it would flourish in every sea and prosper like a trust. Let us begin at home with regulating great corporations and destroy the conditions which we have produced to support trusts, shackle commerce, and rob our people.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does not the gentleman know that all the ships coming from these North Atlantic ports have entered into a combination by which they have agreed that they will not ship this freight unless this condition is contained in this bill of lading, and that the shipper is powerless to ship except by those ships, and he must sign whatever contract is presented?

Mr. ADAMSON. It was not only matter of general information, but was elicited by a question of my own on the hearings, that people who are willing to go into business can compete with these ships. The flour men are not paupers; they are able to go out and build, buy, or charter ships, and the testimony was that the effort had been made to operate outside the provisions of this clause which is sought to be set aside, that independent ships were used without the objectionable clause, that the results were not satisfactory, and all who had attempted it subsequently acquiesced in this arrangement.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The statement has been made that this provision is a discrimination against American consignors alone?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. North American.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I want to ask if any reasons were given for that discrimination against American consignors; whether we get any special benefits or privileges by reason of this clause which is inserted in the contract?

Mr. ADAMSON. The matter was thoroughly explained in the hearings—that if there are provisions in the bills of lading from North Atlantic ports different from provisions in bills of lading from other ports, they are to be accounted for in various ways.

There are different conditions; there are different sized ships; the character of the freight carried is largely different; freight charges are higher than from our ports; the volume of business is largely different, and in addition to that the question raised by another gentleman about its not prevailing at other ports of Europe was accounted for in this way: That at all the other ports inquired of where ships were arriving there were other charges and conditions tantamount in the general average to these charges and conditions; and as the gentlemen have asked those questions, I will say just now that if we were to believe half of the terrible things said by the proponents of this bill about the conditions at London, or believed half their prophecies about what they imagine their profits would be if this bill were passed, the trade of that metropolis would perish. There would not be half a dozen ships unloading there in a year.

They would go to the other ports, if such great advantage existed in favor of those other ports. But the instance cited by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] about New Orleans and Cuba demonstrates that all these commercial interests are alert, looking out for the slightest difference in cost or advantage at different ports and by different lines. These things are not done in a corner. They would be discovered, and to my mind this constitutes an unanswerable argument against the overweening demands and supposed reasons given for the passage of this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I understood my friend to say just now that the flour men are the only men interested in this bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I will ask the gentleman to turn to page 4 of the minority report and he will see this language:

> The agents and attorneys for the millers and lumbermen, who alone advocated this bill before the committee, stated several times.

And so forth. This report is signed by the gentleman from Georgia. I will ask him to explain now how it is that he says that the wheat men or flour men are the only advocates of this bill if his other statement be true.

Mr. ADAMSON. The wheat men are not advocating it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The flour men, then?

Mr. ADAMSON. My understanding is that the flour industry, imagining, from the shape in which their goods are prepared for shipment and the way they are handled, that they can not, perhaps, have as much advantage from existing shipping arrangements as all the other interests in our vast commerce that are acquiescing in it, imagining that it is cheaper for them to come to Congress to pass a bill to feed and clothe them and trim their corns and cut their toe nails than it is to come out honestly and get some ships and go into the business on a better basis, are advocating the passage of this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My friend signed a minority report in which he states that the lumbermen are also interested in it.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman certainly did not hear my remarks. I began by saying that the lumbermen originally appeared before the committee.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said this much I will say further that as I understand the difference between existing conditions and proposed conditions at London, it is tantamount to the celebrated difference between "tweedle dee and tweedle dum."

In the years agone, when limited commerce sent small ships and very few of them to the London docks, which under certain immemorial customs, usages, and statutes were unloaded through small craft and antiquated methods, local tribute was levied and collected on all incoming cargoes, which, when delivered over the ship's rail, relieved the carriers of responsibility.

Those conditions would still prevail but for the fact that larger commerce and larger vessels, making time more valuable, have justified the carrying trade in compounding with local authorities and interests on such terms as enable them to contract with our exporters, not only for the freight, but for the unloading, assorting, safe-keeping, and delivery in drays, vans, boats, or cars within a much longer time and at a much smaller cost than ever prevailed before or could prevail now outside the provisions of the contract sought to be prohibited by this bill.

If the contract of lading be not made, consignees may receive their goods free of terminal charges, if ready to receive them, along ship side in twenty-four hours after the arrival of the ship. If after twenty-four hours, which is usual, they pay 4s. per ton. The contract avoids the 4s. and collects 1s. 9d., extends the time, and preserves, assorts, and delivers the goods. It is conceded that if contract be prohibited carriers can add either the 1s. 9d. or the 4s., or both, or any other sum, to the freight rate. It is immaterial and hacknied to inquire who pays any tax on commerce. It is easily shifted.

The investigations of Ambassador Choate and the report of the royal commission are conclusive to my mind.

If all the people with all the capital engaged in our magnificent foreign commerce, except the millers, are satisfied with existing conditions, I think the miller ought to be content without seeking to jeopardize all other interests in their transactions around the world.

The earth is large and round, the ocean wide and open, shipbuilders, shipowners, and ship operators are alert and anxious for work; the mill owners could manage to build, buy, or charter ships and demonstrate the facility with which they could enter the port of London and distribute therefrom to the discomfiture, if not the annihilation, of the present carrying sharks and trusts, instead of abusing the powers of Congress to discourage resort to honest competition.

Not only an enthusiastic admirer of our commerce, great even as now handicapped, but also languishing for lost opportunities and grieving in contemplation of our incomparable greatness, wealth, and glory, cut off by the emasculation deliberately, wickedly, and sordidly inflicted by the policies inaugurated and persistently continued by the Republican party, I oppose this bill because the obstacles to our prosperous commerce do not exist in the port of London nor any other foreign port, but are found armed, insuperable, and suicidedly self-imposed at every port of our own country and on every inch of our border. Among all our people supporting this condition, whether from avarice or ignorance, none can be found more stolid and persistent nor more indifferent to the interest of their fellowman than the promoters of this foolish measure.

If men who pretend to statesmenship and profess patriotism would cease to stick in the bark when the heart of the tree is involved I would invite them to go with me to London with a cargo of flour, on a voyage fraught with more promise to their constituents than ever signalized any of the seafaring ventures of old, when fabulous fortunes rewarded the accidental investments of obscure persons. We would carry a shipload of flour on one of the modern ships of mammoth capacity, carrying more flour than a century ago could cross the ocean in a year in all ships.

If our friends were dubious about signing a contract, I would consent that we charter a ship or build or buy one. When we entered the Thames and came as near London as the mighty ship could approach, we would yet be many miles from the ports and harbors governed in antiquity by the ancient customs, statutes, and craft, contended for here. We would not stop, however, to strain at gnats while we were swallowing whole troupes of camels without any trouble.

We could afford to pay anything that anybody charged from mid ocean to the warehouses in London, and if we had sense and honesty enough to recognize the old adage that "fair exchange is no robbery," we could demonstrate to our people, some of whom have been long deluded, that if we buy from other people at a fair price we could sell our flour much more rapidly and at a much better price.

In a short time, having loaded our ship from the proceeds of our flour with goods of every kind valuable to our people and calculated to make profitable returns for the venture and insuring wealth and independence to those engaged in the enterprise, we would set sail on the return voyage. Until we sought to enter a port of our native land, "The land of the free and the home of the brave," so called, the land where great States and Territories present the most perfect example and unanswerable argument for free trade the world ever saw—a land whose administration professes more honesty and practices more hypocrisy than any the world ever saw, which offers less encouragement and demands more concessions from others than any the world ever saw, all of us flour men, reveling in the wealth afforded by that cargo rare and novel in our waters, would be richer than Crœsus; but, alas, when we seek to domesticate our wealth we are barred from home and can only communicate our riches to our native land by parting with from 50 to 75 per cent thereof.

When in our chagrin we look around for somebody to reproach we find that all the fellows who are cutting up about the condition have persistently and insistently, and either maliciously or stupidly, contributed to bring it about. If they could rid their minds and hearts of the cupidity or stolidity, whichever it be, which blunts their sentimentality I would remind them that the stricken eagle stretched on the plain finds that—

> Keen were his pangs, but keener far to feel
> He nursed the pinion that impelled the steel.

If that proud bird, pierced by the shaft of death, had been endowed with a human soul, claiming kinship with the skies, neither his own death nor his conscious responsibility therefor could have produced half the poignant remorse that would have come to him if he had realized that either his wickedness or folly had involved in his own destruction the ruin of his fellow-creatures. He who tinkers and temporizes with small and doubtful difficulties at the port of London, while favoring at our own ports barriers between our trade and the commerce of the world, whether wickedly or stupidly, robs his fellow-men and robs himself also, unless he be one of the favored beneficiaries in whose behalf the functions of government are prostituted to the robbery of others. While others may vote as they will, unless additional light illumines my mind, my vote shall emphasize the theory that when Congress undertakes to change port conditions for the benefit of commerce, it should begin not at London, but at home. Verily, if our people would sell to others, we must also buy something. "The liberal soul shall be made fat."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, how much time did the gentleman consume?

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER], a member of the committee.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I should be most happy if I could contribute substantially to the information of the House respecting this question. I confess with considerable humility that I fail to comprehend this question thoroughly in all its details, nor do I understand why there is such vigorous insistence upon improved conditions for American producers if this measure passes. So far as I have been able to comprehend the question, it seems to me that the logic of facts is strictly against this measure; that the interests of American farmers and millers and all other American exporters have been most substantially served by the adoption of the so-called London clause in bills of lading, and that we are taking a leap in the dark, the effect of which no man can foresee, if we legislate to prohibit the freedom of contracting as is provided in the measure.

Now, let us consider what led to the adoption of this clause. There are but few dock companies in London. They have monopolistic privileges conferred by acts of Parliament, the terms of which are uncertain and are variable except that they are extreme, largely by reason of the endeavor of Parliament to encourage and reward the construction of the great docks and to confer still higher privileges upon the barge men in maintaining the time-honored preference which was accorded to these people. The result was that the shipping conditions of the port of London were so uncertain as to the charges which might be imposed upon steamers, that it was an undesirable port for shipowners, and as a result the American exporter was not offered the same shipping opportunities and favors to London as he was in other ports. The ship companies of this country believing that it was a desirable port of entry, sought to overcome the difficulty and to remove the uncertainty, and therefore formed a combination, as has been suggested, and came to an agreement with the dock companies whereby a great reduction of dock charges was secured.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WANGER. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. What proportion of the number of ships entering the port of London come from the United States as against the rest of the world?

Mr. WANGER. Well, not nearly as large a proportion of ships as there is proportion of tonnage, because the ships which go from the United States have grown to be the great monsters among the carrying ships, whereas the numbers which come from other countries are largely small craft and tramp steamers.

Mr. TAWNEY. What proportion of the cargoes?

Mr. WANGER. Why, in the item of flour in the year 1900 1,170,000 hundredweight was carried there from North American ports under these conditions, and only 178,000 hundredweight was brought from all the other quarters of the world, Australia included.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption? Last year our exports of flour to the port of London fell off 1,800,000 barrels, while there was imported from Australia 1,100,000 hundredweight.

Mr. WANGER. One million barrels of American flour is a mere figment in the large volume of American shipments to the port of London, and at the time to which the gentleman refers—and if his statement amounts to anything it means that our trade with London has declined—which is disproven by the fact that during that year the Atlantic Transport Company contracted for the construction in this country of two of the mightiest of freight ships to engage in the world's commerce, and these ships are now on the stocks building.

Mr. TAWNEY. For what companies?

Mr. WANGER. For the Atlantic Transport Line. Now, let me resume where I was when interrupted. In order to make shipping to London desirable, the North American steamship companies got special rates from the dock companies, so that there might not be this freedom from charge on the one hand and exorbitant charges if the goods did not happen to be delivered within twenty-four hours. That there might be an intermediate reasonable charge, and the American ship companies, or, more accurately speaking, the companies engaged in shipping from North American ports, contracted with the dock companies that they would enlarge the capacity of their steamers and multiply their numbers if these concessions were conferred by the dock companies; and it was on account of that very London clause that shipping to London became popular, that shipowners were willing to undertake to carry cargoes there, and that American flour manufacturers and other exporters got more favorable conditions than they had enjoyed theretofore, and that London became a favorite instead of an undesirable port of destination.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. WANGER. Why, certainly, if I have time.

Mr. TAWNEY. What concession has the London Dock Company made to the steamship companies by or under the London landing clause?

Mr. WANGER. They have agreed to a uniformity of expense under seventy-two hours and to certain other conditions which affect ordinary ships.

Mr. TAWNEY. How does that condition, then, affect the freight under the London landing clause? Was the shipper charged for what the steamship companies prior to it were paid 10 pence to do and now they are paid 1 shilling and 9 pence to do it? How does that help the American shipper?

Mr. WANGER. When the dock companies only charged 10 pence per ton it was for goods taken away within twenty-four hours, and when those goods were not removed within twenty-four hours the charge was quadrupled or quintupled.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Four shillings per ton.

Mr. WANGER. Yes; 4 shillings per ton. The gentleman is right. In other words, the shipping people under the conditions prevailing in the port of London were in a position of not knowing whether the charges would be nominal or whether they would be confiscatory, and naturally charged the exporters a rate of freight to guarantee them against loss under the most adverse conditions, whereas at this time exporters and shipowners know that only a reasonable charge will be made. I say reasonable, because no testimony has been offered to show that it is unreasonable, and the entire opposition has been based upon the insidious argument that the London clause is exceptional, without the candid acknowledgment that the conditions which led to its adoption were exceptional, and that it secured freedom and was in liberation instead of being in oppression of American trade with the port of London.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] for ten minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of my colleagues while I submit a few reasons why this legislation should not prevail. It is a sound doctrine of legislation that existing statutes should neither be repealed nor amended unless they are working badly and in response to some large demand on the part of the people who are interested in the operation of the law.

Let us look and see if any such reason exists under the present circumstances. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] in his opening remarks says that this was a conflict between the shippers and the common carriers at sea, in which their respective interests are at stake. I do not think that statement will bear investigation. In fact, inside of two minutes after the statement was made it was contradicted by the pertinent question by members on the floor of the House, in which it was shown that some of the interests whom he quoted—the packers at Chicago and the exporters of lumber—were not interested in this legislation.

Mr. TAWNEY. It shows that they changed their minds.

Mr. ADAMS. I have but ten minutes, Mr. Speaker, and I ask not to be interrupted. There is no demand from all the exporters in the United States for the amendment which is proposed by this bill. When we come down to the hard facts, there is no interest asking that this amendment be made except by the exporters of flour in a certain locality of our country.

In support of this statement it is significant that after all the publicity given to the proposed legislation no shipper of any other class than that of the exporters of flour appeared personally or by representative before the committee to which the bill was referred. Some petitions were filed from commercial bodies in several American cities and from boards of trade interested especially in the shipment of flour. The methods by which such petitions from such bodies to Congress are prepared are too well understood to require comment. In a broad business question of this sort it seems to me that the statements of those who represent every species of export are the ones to carry most weight.

In this connection I will quote the resolutions of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, which is composed of all the leading shippers and exporters from the city which I have the honor in part to represent, and which certainly should have great weight, representing their views, with the members of this House:

THE PHILADELPHIA MARITIME EXCHANGE.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

At a stated meeting of the board of directors of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, held the 27th day of January, 1902, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the attention of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange has been directed to Senate bills 1791 and 1792 and to corresponding bills in the House of Representatives, 4424 and 9059, having for their object the amendment of the act of February 13, 1893, commonly known as the Harter Act; and

Whereas the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange is of the opinion that the legislation sought by the bills is unnecessary, and the terms of the measure are so drastic as to be of questionable policy, and, furthermore, in the opinion of this exchange, it would be of doubtful expediency for Congress to intervene in a question of this kind, which appears to be one particularly connected with usages at different ports not within the jurisdiction of this country: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange that the passage of bills S. 1791 and 1792 and corresponding bills H. R. 4424 and 9059 now before Congress would not be in the best interests of the commerce of this country, and the defeat of these measures is therefore earnestly recommended.

GEO. E. EARNSHAW, President.

Attest:
[SEAL.] E. R. SHARWOOD, Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA, January 27, 1902.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Harter Act was passed with the consent of both the common carriers and the shippers in 1893. It has worked successfully without complaint and has been satisfactory to all parties. We should hesitate a long time before we upset conditions so favorable, and which have prevailed for ten long years in our export trade.

There is another reason, and that is that this bill is practically to regulate the port charges in the city of London. There are other ports in England where there is no complaint made. It is proposed that the Congress of the United States shall enact an amendment to our statutes as they exist to-day to regulate the local port charges of the city of London. I doubt myself the propriety of the Congress of the United States legislating for English port charges. Have we any protest here from English consignees? None whatever. The millers are their own consignees in London, and so are the lumbermen.

So you have your own people simply coming to the American Congress to upset the regulations of trade. These charges in London are not imposed for the benefit of the steamship companies; they have grown out of the peculiar conditions that exist in the Thames. Owing to the smallness of that river and to its want of depth, the great steamships which have come into competition in the transportation of goods can not unload with barges in the Thames. For that reason these docks have been built, and they can only enter at high tide, and they must wait until the recurrence of high tide before they can go out. While they are in these docks the old method of delivering freight in conformity with the rule that when the cargoes went over the ships' side the responsibility of the carrier ceased became impossible. With the enlargement of the ocean-going steamers goods must be put in the hold as soon as received, and when taken out and placed on the dock they must be sorted, and it is for this extra work that this compensation has been made by the party.

Owing to the changed conditions in commerce this work on the dock has increased. Years ago, when steamers were much smaller in size, the cargo was limited in the variety of its consignments and therefore more easily delivered to the consignees. With the increased tonnage of ships, one shipper of to-day on the modern steamer will have in one lot a greater shipment than could be put aboard a small ship of the past. It frequently happens now that a steamer will have a cargo from as many as eight hundred or a thousand shippers and intended for a thousand or more consignees. These have to be assorted in order that they may more quickly be distributed to their respective destinations. The dock charges cover all this at a much lower rate than the individual consignees could perform the similar work at their individual cost, and the practical result is that the dock charges are less to-day than they formerly were. To take away the individual right of contract from the shipper and common carrier, to exclude these dock charges, in the minds of many would be unconstitutional and utterly unwarranted.

To refer to some of the legal aspects of this case, the millers claim that under the Harter Act the vessel can not contract against her duty to make proper delivery; and that as proper delivery implies separating the various consignments, the vessel owner can not contract against his obligation to perform that duty. But it must be remembered that the Harter Act considers only loss or damage arising from improper delivery. If the goods are specifically injured through an improper delivery, the vessel is bound to pay for the damage; but there is nothing in the act to prevent the parties from making any contract they please as to the payment of the expense of making a proper delivery; the act is concerned simply with losses caused by negligence.

They say that the law of England requires that all cargo shall be delivered free of charge. This is not so. The act of Parliament provided that the waters in artificial docks should at all times be as free to barges and lighters as were the waters of the river Thames, and that the goods discharged into the lighters and barges should be exempt from any payment. The court of Queen's bench division in the case of Borrowman, Phillips & Co. v. Wilson held that the London clause, which puts the charge complained of on the consignees, was enforceable because the parties had agreed to it in the bill of lading, and that they could contract themselves out of the custom of London or out of the statutory right if they wished to do so.

The court did not put it on the ground which the shippers mention, viz, that the contract having been made in America the courts of England were bound to enforce it at London, although against the laws of England. Neither the courts of England nor of any other country would do such a thing. The law which governs a contract as to performance, certainly so far as public policy is concerned, is the law of the place of performance, and the courts of that place would not enforce provisions against the public policy of that place because they were not prohibited in the place where the contract was made. Our Federal courts habitually refuse to enforce in this country the most express stipulations made in foreign countries where they are perfectly valid that the carrier shall not be responsible for the negligence of his servants.

In the particular case referred to Mr. Justice Day went much further, and declared that the provisions of the London clause were very reasonable, and that it would be ridiculous to apply to modern steamers old customs which might have been very proper for small vessels and small cargoes.

The shippers of flour further claim that the London dock charges are discrimination against American shippers. As a matter of fact this does not exist in the case under consideration, because all North American exports are treated alike whether they go by American or Canadian lines. In further evidence, despite all statements to the contrary, the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, one of the largest steam navigation companies plying to the Orient, the Continent, and England, have a similar clause to the "London landing clause" on their bills of lading. A bill of lading of that company of as recent date as February 1, 1902, issued at Marseille, contains the following clause: "The expense of discharging from the steamer and manipulating to be borne by the goods at the rate of three-sixths per 1,000 kilos (the equivalent of a ton.)" It will be noted that this is a greater charge than the London landing clause. The term "manipulating" covers the work equivalent to that done under the London clause.

But there is a stronger reason than all this. It is proposed to compel the common carriers to put the charge on the cargo and make it a part of it. If you did this, you would put it in the power of any unfriendly nation wishing to enhance the interests of its steamship companies, by putting on local port charges, to compel our people, should they be forbidden to exempt that by a contract or bill of lading, to make a discrimination against the American exportation and against the American steamship companies that would ruin us in competing with vessels flying a foreign flag. This, to my mind, is one of the most serious questions involved in this amendment.

Why, sir, taking into consideration the one interest that has complained, where can be the great hardship in the exportation of flour when from 1890 up to 1900 the exportation of flour to the port of London has increased 70 per cent? There is not a man within the sound of my voice who does not know that under such conditions as the gentleman from Minnesota would have us believe exist no such increase could take place at the port of London; for if such conditions existed, the importation would be driven to other ports of Great Britain.

It is a self-evident proposition that where conditions are onerous prosperity can not exist. But they are not onerous. They are for the advantage of the shippers, who are deriving advantages from the London dock charge, from warehousing, and from the assortment of the freight, whereby the cost of assorting freight is reduced to what it was under former conditions. In the old days each consignee had to send his stevedores to the dock and receive the freight by lighters and take it away. Under present conditions it is allowed to remain seventy-two hours, and when it comes to taking it away, either by rail or by barge——

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a correction right there? The consignee is not allowed seventy-two hours after the goods are assorted, but seventy-two hours from the time the ship is reported.

Mr. ADAMS. How long does it take the ship to come up?

Mr. TAWNEY. From eight to eighteen hours.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I take eight from seventy-two and it leaves sixty-four hours. The gentleman will have to advance some stronger reason for overturning the existing rules of transportation——

Mr. TAWNEY. No——

Mr. ADAMS. I can not yield further.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to correct the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] decline to yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I decline. I did not interrupt the gentleman when he was speaking.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, there is another point to which I will call the attention of my colleagues. Our country is passing through a period of territorial and commercial expansion. With the increase in our manufactures and agricultural products it is essential that we obtain new markets. We are legislating and doing everything in our power toward this end. We are inaugurating reciprocal trade relations. We are enacting laws to enlarge the trade with our insular possessions. We are doing everything in a financial way to facilitate the transactions of our merchants, and it especially behooves us that we pass no legislation that would hamper in any way the facilities of our shippers and exporters, which, after all, would be the greatest factor in the promotion of the increase of the commerce of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. Will that be sufficient for the gentleman?

Mr. BURLESON. I think so; but it may not be.

Mr. Speaker, prior to 1888 the antiquated methods and customs which had obtained in the port of London for more than three centuries controlled the unloading and landing of all freight. At that time the shipping interests of America in this port had developed to such an extent that the officials or authorities in charge of the port found themselves unable to grapple with the problem of handling this freight.

The volume of commerce and the manner of its transportation from the North Atlantic ports going to London had assumed phases presented by the shipping interests of no other country upon earth. Colossal vessels had been constructed for the purpose of carrying this volume of commerce, which was flowing from the United States to the port of London. So large were these vessels that if old methods of unloading were to continue it would require weeks to unload one cargo. If these antiquated customs with reference to the unloading and handling of freight were to continue it was patent it would be impossible for this volume of trade from the North Atlantic ports to London to continue. At this time the American shipowners——

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman kindly describe the conditions which existed prior to 1888, so that we may see whether he understands what they were?

Mr. BURLESON. The conditions, as far as the physical facts are concerned, which existed prior to 1888 were substantially what they are now, with the exception of the marked changes which were brought about by the union of American shippers——

Mr. TAWNEY. What were those changes?

Mr. BURLESON. They are changes in the method of handling the freight at the port; its unloading and landing and provision for it are embodied in every bill of lading now given by one who wants to ship through freight to London.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman aware that this change simply means that instead of the steamship company paying the dock company for doing the work, the steamship company does identically the same work itself and charges more for it than was charged before?

Mr. BURLESON. I am not aware of that.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the fact.

Mr. BURLESON. On the contrary, I will show that there is absolutely no complaint, so far as freight charges are concerned, from any person in America attempting to ship goods from the North Atlantic ports to the port of London. On the contrary, the American shipowners took up this matter with the owners of the London docks, and after great persuasion prevailed upon them to enter into certain contracts which have brought about present conditions, one of these conditions being that the so-called "London landing clause" is embodied in every bill of lading given to a shipper in the United States who wants to ship from a North Atlantic port to the port of London.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Does not the gentleman know it to be a fact that the shipowners, a long time before the London clause was adopted, paid those charges themselves without complaint—paid them by agreement?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly; and right now the 1s. 9d. does not cover all the cost of unloading, landing, assorting, and sheltering freight preparatory to its delivery; in fact, the hearings disclose it covers only 60 per cent of this cost, and 40 per cent of the same enters into and constitutes part of the freight charges between North Atlantic ports and the port of London.

That is unquestionably true; and I hope to demonstrate, if I can proceed without further interruption, that the sole ground of complaint is to the character of the charge, and not to the charge itself; in fact, an objection to a mere method of bookkeeping; and that if existing conditions are disturbed it will disarrange the traffic arrangements existing between the shipowners in this country and the dock owners at the port of London to such an extent that 70 or 75 per cent of all character of goods and produce going to London will be materially affected; in fact, all freight going from this country to London, with the exception of flour.

As I was stating, these colossal vessels were constructed, and if these antiquated methods with reference to the unloading and landing of the freight were to obtain, it would take from two to three weeks to unload one of them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from New York to yield me an additional five minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BURLESON. The American shipowners, with a view of overcoming this trouble, took the matter up with the owners of the London docks and, as I have stated, matters culminated in the execution of a contract out of which has grown this custom or practice with reference to the London landing clause in American bills of lading. One of the arguments used by the American shipowner as a means of persuasion to the London dockowner to enter into the contracts I have mentioned was the assurance that it would materially increase the freight from the North Atlantic ports to the London port. How well that expectation has been realized.

Since 1888 there has been such a material increase that whereas then there were only ten millions of hundredweight going from American ports in 1900 from the North Atlantic ports there were seventeen millions of hundredweight going to Great Britain through the port of London. For thirteen years these contracts have been executed, the London landing clause placed in each bill of lading, and no complaint has been heard from any quarter with reference thereto. Now, suddenly it is all wrong. Why? What is the basis of complaint? Is it that by virtue of these contracts embracing the London clause that an excessive freight tariff is levied on flour between the North Atlantic ports and the London port? No.

On the contrary, in the hearings before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee on this bill, the gentleman who was selected by the flour-milling interests of this country to speak for them in advocacy of this measure had the statement repeatedly made in his presence, and he did not attempt to controvert it, that the freight rate on flour, having added to it the 1 shilling and 9 pence provided for in the London clause, between the North Atlantic ports and the London port was lower than from any other port in the world.

When asked the question then why, if they did not want a reduction in the charge, they wanted a change, the only reason that was assigned—and I challenge the gentleman now to give an additional one—as stated by this witness, was that the 1 shilling and 9 pence, as stipulated for by the London clause, was a fixed charge, and that they were perfectly willing to have it added to the freight charge; but they did not want it to remain a fixed and inflexible charge, but wanted it added as part of the freight charge, so as to place it upon a competitive basis.

When the question was put to him direct as to whether or not the objection was not merely as to the form of the charge, a mere matter of method of bookkeeping, the gentleman who was there representing the milling interests failed to satisfy the questioner, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], that that was not the only objection which he had or could make. If they have no objection to the rate, then what is their objection? Do they object because they have not sufficient time to unload and land their freight?

Under these contracts now they are given three times the time, seventy-two hours, instead of twenty-four hours, which they were formerly given. Is it that unnecessary delay is occasioned at the port in the delivery of flour to London consignees? On the contrary, it has been conclusively demonstrated that one of these great ships can be unloaded under the present methods in four times as short a time as formerly obtained, or would obtain if this bill passes and a return was had to the antiquated customs and methods of the old days.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I know the gentleman does not wish to misrepresent the facts.

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly not.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the gentleman knows that they have not seventy-two hours after a ship is unloaded to come and get their goods.

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly I do, and I did not so state; I speak of the unloading of the ship.

Mr. TAWNEY. That they had twenty-four hours after the ship was unloaded and the cargo was sorted, prior to the London clause.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, no.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then why does the gentleman state that they have three times as much time now to get their goods after they are unloaded as before?

Mr. BURLESON. I did not say after they were unloaded. I said they had three times as much time to unload these vessels, and that they could be unloaded in one-third or one-fourth the time that they could be unloaded if old conditions obtained.

Mr. MANN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Texas not to yield everything the gentleman from Minnesota claims, because a part of what he has stated is inconsistent with the facts.

Mr. BURLESON. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota. I will attempt to make myself more clear. One of these great vessels, under the terms of this contract with the London Dock Company, under present methods, can be unloaded within two or three days and can be reloaded and started back to New York upon schedule time. It would be impossible to do this if the act insisted upon by the gentleman from Minnesota were passed and we were compelled to return to ancient methods.

But, Mr. Speaker, what is the real grievance of the mill men, the flour manufacturers, against the London landing clause? As I have stated—and I want to be perfectly fair to them—they contend that they desire to convert this fixed or inflexible charge of 1s. 9d. into a flexible charge by requiring it to be added to the freight charge, thereby placing it on a competitive basis.

But I fear that is not their only reason for urging this bill. Let us see. Flour constitutes, as I now recollect it, a little less than 30 per cent of the North American imports into the London port. We are all aware that flour is prepared for market in either barrels or sacks, and when exported and it reaches its port of destination it is easily separable from other parts of the vessel's cargo.

Now, in ordinary course of trade, a ship carrying freight charges simply for carrying the freight, and when it reaches port and places its freight on the dock there its responsibility ends, and the dock company assorts and delivers the freight thus unloaded and makes dock charges for same.

Under the operation of the London landing clause the ships assume responsibility for the cargo after placing the same on the docks and do all the work commonly done by the dock company. Now, if this bill is passed, flour, because it is easily separable, might be able to escape the 4 shillings per ton dock charge which would almost surely attach to the other 70 or 75 per cent of American goods and produce which is not so easily separated, but would require days for proper assortment and delivery.

The return to antiquated methods might benefit the flour trade, but we should not legislate in the interest of one class.

Let us see further.

It is an admitted fact that there is great rivalry between the exporters of wheat and the millers who are engaged in exporting flour.

What effect will the passage of this bill have on the respective interests of these rivals, and, indirectly, on another man who is interested and who is asking for no change of existing conditions, in this particular at least—the producer of wheat?

I will give you the answer to this query from the lips of the gentleman who appeared before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce representing the millers in advocacy of this bill. This gentleman, Mr. Herbert Bradley, of New York, was introduced as one perhaps more familiar with the actual workings of the London docks than anyone else in this country. Hear what he says. Mr. MANN, a member of the committee, interrogated him:

Mr. MANN. Do you think if the commercial clause—

And he meant the London landing clause—were taken out that that would increase the shipments of flour and decrease the shipments of wheat?

Mr. BRADLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is the effect of it?

Mr. BRADLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you would buy wheat cheaper in the United States—the millers would?

Mr. BRADLEY. No, sir; I do not think we would buy wheat cheaper, but we would be put on a better basis.

The CHAIRMAN. How? Please explain that.

Mr. BRADLEY. Because the consignees of the grain or the consignees of the flour figure on the total cost of that commodity laid down in London, we will say. Now, the freight rate averages, I think I am pretty close to it, at least 5 and 6 cents and higher than that a hundred pounds cheaper than flour.

The consequence is that every burden that is put upon the flour is so much of a greater burden. We have got to compete with the world. It is not like any other market. For instance, you take the Australian flour. It is true there is a comparatively small quantity of Australian flour coming into London, but the price of Australian flour makes the price of our flour.

This explanation, I contend, does not explain. The fact remains that Mr. Bradley says if we pass this bill there will be less wheat exported. If so, there will be more wheat on the American market. It is a fundamental principle of economics which governs in a case like this. Unquestionably, if less wheat was exported and more wheat was thrown on the American market it would be to the millers' advantage and to the detriment of the American farmer who produces the wheat.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I oppose this bill. In the interest of the shippers of 70 or 75 per cent of the goods and produce going into the London port, who will surely be saddled with the 4 shillings per ton in dock charges on a large part of each shipment if this bill passes, and in the interest of the producers of wheat, whose opportunity to export same will surely be measurably endangered, I resist its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that he occupy some of his time now.

Mr. TAWNEY. How much time has the gentleman from New York occupied?

Mr. SHERMAN. Forty-five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has one hour and thirty-two minutes remaining.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have consumed an hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. Four gentlemen in succession have already spoken on this side, and I should prefer that somebody on the other side should speak now.

Mr. TAWNEY. There are very few on this side who wish to speak. There are two members of the committee who wish to speak on the affirmative side.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will not one of them speak now? Then we will balance it up after that.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the negative side should occupy as much time as we have before we occupy any more time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well. I will yield, then, ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURGESS].

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Clerk to read a letter which I send to the desk, and after it is read I wish to comment upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas presents a letter in his time, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

GALVESTON DEEP-WATER COMMITTEE,
CORNER STRAND AND TWENTY-SECOND STREETS,
Galveston, Tex., December 3, 1902.

Hon. GEORGE F. BURGESS, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington.

DEAR SIR: As the representatives of the commercial organizations of the city of Galveston we beg to call your attention to House bill No. 9059, which seeks to amend the Harter Act, and to ask that you use your influence to secure its defeat. We submit the following as some of the reasons why this bill should not become a law:

First. No nation, particularly one striving for commercial supremacy, should restrict its merchants and ship agents in their right to contract against onerous duties imposed in a foreign port.

Second. The bill, which it is claimed will apply only to the port of London and is aimed only at ship owners, is so sweeping in its scope that it will affect American exports in a great number of ports.

Third. The American merchant should not thus be handicapped while his commercial rivals in other nations are unrestricted in their right of contract.

Fourth. Hardly any two ports are alike in their surroundings or are governed by similar laws and customs; for these reasons the shippers and the shipowners from time immemorial, under the right of contract, have limited their ability to delivery at the end of the ship's tackle.

Fifth. All legislation tending to subject shippers or shipowners to foreign port charges will inevitably result in higher freight rates upon exports, and these increased charges must primarily be borne by the American shipper.

Sixth. The exports through this port being largely of agricultural products, the increased ocean freight rates caused by such a law would ultimately have to be borne by the American producer.

Seventh. The effect of this bill, should it become a law, would be to shift the burden of onerous laws and customs from consignees in foreign ports to the American shipper, notwithstanding the fact that the consignees in such ports understand much better the local situation and are in a better position to protect themselves than their consignors.

These are only some of the disadvantages that our experience as shippers convince us will arise from the enactment of such a law.

Very respectfully,

R. WAVERLEY SMITH,
Chairman Galveston Deep-Water Committee and President Chamber of Commerce.
I. H. KEMPNER,
Vice-President Galveston Cotton Exchange and Board of Trade.
B. ADOUE,
President Galveston Maritime Association.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, this letter comes from a high commercial source in my section. It is written by men of character and ability, who have no interest at stake other than the furtherance of a great commerce from a great port, and that being the case the letter is entitled to weight.

Among the reasons thus briefly given in the letter one strikes me with peculiar force. This tinkering by legislation with the right of private contract is always dangerous and can not be defended except upon the ground that the limitation sought to be placed upon the unlimited right of contract seeks to prevent a stipulation which is oppressive and unconscionable. Safe and wise statesmanship would go no further. The Harter Act prevents a stipulation which would limit the liability of a steamship company against its own negligence, but this bill provides that it shall be prohibited from contracting with its shipper as to the method alone by which freight shall be handled in foreign ports, for there is no contention here that these charges are oppressive, that they are unjust, that they ought not to be paid, that they are injurious to commerce. The contrary has been judicially ascertained to be true.

This very question, three years after the process was established, was taken in the English courts and this clause tested, and the courts decided that it was a contract in furtherance of the shipping interests involved, that it worked to the advantage of both, that it was not unreasonable, that it was not oppressive, that it was not injurious to the shipper or to those involved, but almost necessary, the court says, to the expeditious transaction of the commerce of the port of London.

Now, I would be the last one, if I knew it, to fail to vote for a bill that would add to the interests of the country to which I belong; but before I go to tinkering with the rights of steamship lines, railroads, or individuals, I wish to see that I will benefit the commerce of the country I serve. The argument that it is a steamship company or a railroad company or a corporation has no weight with a well-balanced judicial mind. It cuts no ice with any man who wishes to do what is fair and right and best for his country. We ought not to refer either to the flour interest or the shipping interest or any other particular interest here on a great proposition of this kind.

The question is, What good will be done to commerce and shipping by the passage of this bill? After a careful investigation of all the arguments that have been written in its favor, and of the report which has been written in its favor, I fail to see anything whatever beyond the bare contention that if you blend the necessary existing charges, built up by fourteen years of successful operation, into the ocean freights, possibly competition will lessen these charges. That is impossible, for the reason that these charges are fixed in a foreign port by conditions over which no steamship line can possibly have any control, and it is a mere question of changing existing business conditions, prosperous and healthy, in a wild effort to benefit some particular class of shippers by fixing a limitation upon the right of private contract.

The English courts have determined that this is unwise, that it is unreasonable and injurious. Doubtless the American courts would determine the same. Then why shall the American Congress by legislative enactment infringe the right of private contract when the courts say and the facts show nobody is injured by it? Shall we legislate so as to possibly promote competition that may benefit a particular class? If we commit ourselves to that policy, where shall we stop in legislation of this character?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Is it not an outrage and violence upon private contract to impose this London clause in the contracts against the consent of the North Atlantic shippers?

Mr. BURGESS. Do you contend that your shippers will not have this to pay if this bill passes?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. BURGESS. I think it is.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. My question is whether it is in violation of private contract to impose this obnoxious London dock clause on the North Atlantic shipper?

Mr. BURGESS. We have got no contract until one is made, have we?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], a member of the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with attention to the remarks made by a number of gentlemen who oppose the passage of this bill, and the result of their contention seems to me to be this—that the will of the shipowners should be substituted for the law that governs the foreign port in the country where these ship companies were incorporated and whose flag they carry. That seems to me to be the contention. My purpose and my object, Mr. Speaker, so far as I can do so in the limited time allowed to me, is to present what I believe to be the law in this case and what the effect of this London landing clause is as opposed to the law. When that is done and submitted fairly to the honest judgment and opinion of this House, then I have no further interest in the subject, for it is solely my idea of justice and right that influences me in this important matter.

The bill under consideration and reported favorably by a majority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce proposes to amend the first section of an act known as the "Harter Act," passed by Congress in 1893. The first section of the Harter Act, among other things, provides that it shall be unlawful for any shipowner, agent, or master to insert into any bill of lading any clause, covenant, or agreement which exempts the shipowner from damages for negligence, and the absence of which clause in the bill of lading would make the shipowner liable for the damages under the provisions of the common law. This bill proposes to amend said first section of the Harter Act by enlarging the same by making it unlawful for any shipowner, manager, or agent to insert in any bill of lading or other shipping document any clause, covenant, or agreement whereby there is imposed on the merchandise or consignees the payment of dock, landing, or sorting charges, or charges of any kind for the discharge or delivery of the cargo of the ship, the payment of which is imposed on the shipowner, his agent, or master, or any person other than the consignees, by the laws or statutes or customs of the foreign country or countries to which such merchandise shall be transported.

In other words, this bill proposes to prevent the shipowner from so using a bill of lading as to transfer from his shoulders the burdens of certain landing charges—outside of and in addition to freight charges—to the consignees of his ship's cargo, which charges the laws of certain foreign ports require the shipowner himself to pay. This bill has, in fact, Mr. Speaker, a specific, well-defined application. And while it reads upon its face as applicable to all foreign ports, yet in truth it is intended to correct a trouble and mitigate an evil that alone exists at the port of London, England, in connection with North Atlantic ship lines.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to make myself plain and understood, it becomes my duty to refer briefly to the history which creates the necessity and the reason for which this bill is presented, and the object it has in view and the evil it proposes to remedy. Hundreds of years ago the King of England, under his royal license, granted to certain bargemen and lightermen certain immunities, privileges, and exemptions from the payment of certain charges and costs, by reason of services that these lightermen and bargemen rendered the King on the waters of the Thames. That exemption of costs and payment of charges was that these lightermen and these bargemen should enjoy the right in the waters of the Thames to carry their lighters and their barges along the side of the ships and have an overside or over-rail discharge of their cargoes of the ships into these barges and lighters without the payment of other costs or charges save the freight bill.

The first dock company of London was incorporated nearly two hundred years ago by the Parliament of Great Britain. These bargemen and lightermen, in view of the privileges that had been extended to them by the King of England, had sufficient power and influence in the Parliament of Great Britain to insert in the charter of the first dock company ever incorporated the same privileges and the same exemptions that they had enjoyed from the license of the King of England from time immemorial.

Mr. GILBERT. What was the difference between the charges of the dock companies and the lightermen?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. There was no dock company at the time that the King first granted this license. The dock companies were incorporated many years after these bargemen had enjoyed the license of the King. In order to make myself intelligent, I will read what this privilege was. I read from the act of Parliament the provision which was inserted in the first dock charter, and which required the dock waters to be as free as had been the waters of the Thames:

186. All lighters and craft entering into the docks, basins, locks, or cuts to discharge or receive ballast or goods to or from on board of any ship or vessel lying therein shall be exempt from the payment of any rates so long as the craft or lighter is bona fide engaged in so discharging the ballast or goods, and also all the ballast or goods so discharged or received shall be exempt from any payment whatever.

This simply perpetuated the custom granted by the King to bargemen and lightermen.

That was inserted in the first dock company's charter. That is the law to-day, and no man denies it.

Now, in view of the fact that there had been a wonderful improvement and development in the transportation facilities of the seas, in the matter of commerce and the enlargement of the shipping facilities, the use of large steamships, etc., these shipowners, looking only to their own interests, in view of the fact that it was a great trouble and inconvenience to have the sorting of the cargo—as they were required under the old custom to do—on the decks of the ship; in view of the fact, looking to their own interests, that it caused delay when these barges and these lighters came alongside of the vessel and had an overside delivery; desiring to expedite the delivery of their cargoes in order that they would save time and money to themselves in returning for another load; looking to these facts, the shipowners themselves adopted a plan, a policy of unloading their cargoes upon the quays of the docks, and doing that for their own convenience. It was done by an agreement between the shipowner and the master of the dock. The shipowner bought so much space on the docks on which to discharge and deliver the cargo to the consignees. There the goods were parceled out or sorted, and he employed dock men to sort the goods, setting each consignee's parcel off to itself. The shipowner paid out of his own pocket all of these charges just as if he had delivered his cargo overside his vessel into the barges and lighters under the freedom granted by the King of England. For their own pecuniary advancement and interest they did all of this. The London clause, as stated in the minority report, was the immediate result of this concurrence of delivery and discharge on the quays of the dock between the shipowner and the dock company. That is not the fact. Mr. Choate in his report comments on it properly. He says:

We accordingly find that until the introduction of the London clause into the bills of lading of the North Atlantic lines running to London, in April, 1888, and since then in all other trade, all such expenses in that port have been paid by the shipowner. It comes out of the freight, as all expense of discharge and delivery has always done.

For a considerable period prior to the introduction into the bills of lading of the London clause, the steamship companies discharging cargo on the dock quays (including the North Atlantic lines) had been paying the dock companies for flour at the rate of 10d. (20 cents) per ton, which they bore themselves without any attempt, so far as I have been able to learn, to put the whole or any part of it upon the owners of cargo.

The shipowners adopted that policy. What does Mr. Choate say in connection with that in connection with section 4 of the shipping act of the Parliament of Great Britain, 1899, which I will read?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I want to understand that point.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It is one of the strong points in this case, I think.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I understand the large ships had been in the habit of unloading their cargoes onto lighters and barges?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. After the organization of the dock companies they stopped doing that and unloaded onto the dock, and then they paid these charges themselves?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. They did; they paid them until the charge reached 20 cents per ton on flour. The bargemen and lightermen, still active and acute and farseeing as to their interest, got this clause further enacted by the Parliament of Great Britain, known as section 4 of the shipping act of Great Britain. It reads as follows:

Extract from merchant shipping act, 1894, chapter 60, 57 and 58 Victoria, section 493.

(4) If any goods are, for the purpose of convenience in assorting the same, landed at the wharf where the ship is discharged, and the owner of the goods at the time of that landing has made entry and is ready and offers to take deilvery thereof, and to convey the same to some other wharf or warehouse, the goods shall be assorted at landing, and shall, if demanded, be delivered to the owner thereof within twenty-four hours after assortment, and the expense of and consequent upon that landing and assortment shall be borne by the shipowner.

Then it was that these discharges were made on the quays and docks for a long time in advance of the London clause to promote the interests of the shipowners themselves.

Mr. GILBERT. Since the enactment of that statute what are the facts? Do the ships go up and unload themselves onto the dock, and are the services of the lighters and barges dispensed with?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The services of the lighters and barges are dispensed with. It is a substitute for the custom of over delivery into barges, and a substitute that the shipowners resorted to in order to benefit their own interests in matter of convenience and saving time.

Mr. GILBERT. And the cargoes are unloaded on the dock?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. They are unloaded on the dock. What does Mr. Choate say about that, Mr. Speaker? He made a judicial investigation; an investigation requested by our State Department. He made it as our ambassador to England. He says:

While such was the custom of the port, if for his own convenience the shipowner discharged the cargo, or any part of it, on the dock quay, the dock owners had a right to levy a charge upon it, and this charge, so far as I can learn, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary with the owner of cargo, has uniformly been paid by the shipowner, who, for his own convenience, preferred to discharge it there instead of over side.

Then, the law as it stands now regulating the discharge of cargoes from ships at the port of London is: First, the consignee has the right to demand an over-side or over-rail delivery of his goods into the barges or lighters that come along the side of the vessel, and this he is entitled to without the payment of any costs or charges for delivery. He pays the freight bill. Second, if the shipowner discharges the cargo on the quays of the docks, then the consignee has the right, within twenty-four hours after his goods have been sorted on the dock, to demand his goods, paying no costs or charges save the freight bill. No gentleman on this floor will deny this to be the law of Great Britain.

Then the question is, What did the shipowners do to get rid of these two frowning and easily understood statutes that caused them to pay landing charges? They put their heads together and they devised—they concocted the most unjust, inequitable, and unfair clause that I have ever known to be put into any bill of lading, an outrageous imposition on the industries of our country—what is known as the "London landing clause." That simply does this; it pretends to be a contract which I want to discuss for a little while. I will first read the London clause:

London clause (A).—The steamer owners shall, at their option, be entitled to land the goods within mentioned on the quays or to discharge them into craft hired by them immediately on arrival and at consignee's risk and expense, the steamer owners being entitled to collect the same charges on goods entered for landing at the docks as on goods entered for delivery to lighters. Consignees desirous of conveying their goods elsewhere shall, on making application to the steamer's agents or to the dock company within seventy-two hours after the steamer shall have been reported, be entitled to delivery into consignee's lighters at the following rates, to be paid, with the freight, to the steamer's agents against release, or to the dock company, if so directed by the steamer's agents, viz:

Following wooden goods in packages: Clothes pegs, spade handles, blind rollers, hubs, spokes, wheels, and oars, 1s. 3d. per ton measurement; hops, 2s. 9d. per ton weight; lumber and logs, 2s. per ton measurement, 2s. 6d. per ton weight, at steamer's option; all other general cargo, except slates, 1s. 9d. per ton, weight or measurement, at steamer's option; minimum charge 1 ton. Slates to pay 2s. per ton weight. Cheese may also be removed by consignee's vans within one week after steamer shall have reported, subject to a like payment of 3s. 3d. per ton weight, such sum to include loading up and wharfage. Any single article weighing over 1 ton to be subject to extra expenses for handling, if incurred. All measurement freight to be on the intake caliper measurement, as stated in margin. Freights by weight (grain excepted) to be paid upon the weight stated in margin, or, at steamer's option, upon landing weight. If weight has been understated, the cost of weighing to be a charge upon the goods. All shipments of lumber and logs which are sent forward on a weight rate will pay freight on the railroad weights furnished at port of shipment. No alteration will be permitted in any weight or freights included in this bill of lading except at steamer's option.

The sole object and aim of the shipowner, as shown in this clause, is to evade the laws of Great Britain in a pretended contract and free themselves from the payment of any costs or charges of landing and put the payment upon the consignee, whom the law of Great Britain exempts from paying it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is it the gentleman's opinion that this charge is valid upon the consignee or consignor?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It is my opinion that the London clause, framed in the way it is, is invalid in every respect as a contract.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I agree with the gentleman and favor the bill. But who pays it, the consignee or the consignor?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Why, the consignee pays it, and if the consignee pays it on the other side of the water, as a matter of course the shipper or the consignor over here suffers accordingly; because if I buy a barrel of flour over there, knowing the London clause, I will make the shipper here pay for the additional charge under the London clause by including it in the amount I pay.

Now, it is a clear proposition that the shipowners got together and formed and concocted this London clause simply to relieve themselves and make the shipper or importer pay these charges.

Many efforts have been made in the courts of England and in the Parliament of England to annul or amend the statutes that I have read and which the London clause, as framed by the North Atlantic ship lines, virtually annuls on the theory that the shipper agrees to the bill of lading, and the same is a contract; but all these efforts on the other side of the waters have signally failed. It is true that a stated case was tried in London before Justices Day and Wilson in the Queen's Bench Division, but the decision of these eminent judges merely decided that the shippers of this country had contracted the consignors out of the rights that the laws of England gave them. That is the evil that this bill proposes to correct. Mr. Choate in his report comments quite caustically on the report or decision of the Queen's Bench Court. He says:

The shipowners rely very strongly on this judgment and on the opinion as establishing their side of the case, but it will be noticed that the only point decided was that the plaintiffs were bound by their contract, and that they had contracted themselves out of the right they claimed, and that beyond that the opinion is largely obiter. There was no evidence whatever, so far as I can see, of the moderateness or reasonableness of the charge, which is the most important point. The report of the case is among the accompanying papers.

Although it is stated by the special case and by the judge that the introduction of the London clause was in pursuance of an arrangement made at a meeting of shipowners and merchants held in London in December, 1887, this is stoutly denied by the merchants here, who insist that the only meeting ever held on the subject was a meeting of shipowners and consignees, not of cargoes, but of ships, who were, of course, only the agents of the shipowners.

And the question now is on the subject of the contract. In this connection I wish to refer to the principle of law bearing upon the question—the law as taught by Chitty on Contracts—that there must be a mutuality or concurrence of wills in order to make a valid contract. Does any gentleman contend on this floor for a moment that where the arbitrary power exists on the part of one of the contracting parties to raise the London charges as they have done since 1888, from 1s. 2d. to 1s. 6d., and next to 1s. 9d., making 42 cents, without ever consulting the other party to the contract—do you call that a valid and a binding contract? That is what they are contending here for, and that is all.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I will not be so unkind as to refer to it here as being in the nature of a "hold-up" on a public highway. But what refuge have these shippers? Why, sir, Mr. Hemphill, the attorney for the ship interests, in his statement before the committee, said:

Of course, if they are in business and want to ship to London they have to ship by our boats or hire boats of their own, or do something else of that kind; but there is no law that compels them to do this business that I know of.

Is that a contract born of mutual consent? The rule is different in a case like this and a contract between my friend across the aisle and myself. I ask gentlemen to listen to the language of Judge Bradley of the Supreme Court of the United States. I read from the case of the New York Central Railroad Company v. Lockwood, 17 Wallace:

The carrier and his customer do not stand on a footing of equality. The latter is only one individual of a million. He can not afford to higgle or stand out and seek redress in the courts. His business will not admit such a course. He prefers, rather, to accept any bill of lading or sign any paper the carrier presents; often, indeed, without knowledge what the one or the other contains. In most cases he has no alternative but to do this, or abandon his business.

That is the case with these shippers.

If the customer had any real freedom of choice, if he had a reason and practicable alternative, and if the employment of the carrier were not a public one, charging him with the duty of accommodating the public in the line of his employment, then if the customer assumes the risk of negligence it could with more reason be said to be his private affair and no concern of the public. But the condition of things is entirely different, and especially so under the modified arrangements which the carrying trade has assumed. The business is mostly concentrated in a few powerful corporations whose position in the body politic enables them to control it.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, whether that is not the condition of these North Atlantic lines running to London? They have formed this combination. No matter whether there is one interest or whether there are more represented before this House, that makes no difference. No matter whether it be a fact, as gentlemen have said here, but which I do not concede, that nobody appears here except the lumbermen and flour men. It is a principle we are contending for. A man admits his case away when he says that he contends that the bill ought to be defeated because there is nobody here but the millers and the lumbermen contending for it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the time left to me I shall direct my attention further in this matter to my specific objections to this London landing clause. First, this London clause is in the nature of a duty imposed upon American products, not by the British Government, but by a corporation for its own benefit. Second, it is an arbitrary charge made by reason of a combination.

A MEMBER. A combination of corporations.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes. I put that question to any gentleman on either side of the House to answer it. Is not this in the nature of a duty imposed exclusively upon American products, not by the British Government, but by a corporation or combination of corporations, whose steamships run from the North Atlantic ports to the port of London?

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I have but a few minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman asked a question, and I should like to answer it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Very well.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to state that this sort of an agreement is not limited to the steamships running from the North Atlantic ports. The Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Company, as I happen to know, has the same clause in its bills of lading, as has every other steamship company whose steamers run to England.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. There is no port in the world, so far as I have found, that has the conditions gathered around it to-day that the trade from the North Atlantic seaports to London has. There are no other ports in the world save the port of London that this bill directly applies to in actual effect.

But why do I say that this charge is in the nature of a duty? Mr. Choate plainly says in his report that there can be no question that there is a discrimination against flour, and that it amounts to 3½ cents a barrel. Why should that be? The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE] asked the question of the gentleman from Georgia. Could he give any explanation of why it is? Three and one-half cents a barrel on flour going from our North Atlantic ports that does not attach to flour from France or Australia—a charge on this one industry which, since 1888, has amounted to $1,500,000, which these shipowners have taken from the pockets of the flour men of this country by transferring this charge from their own shoulders to these flour interests. Yet gentlemen stand on this floor and say, "Oh, there is nobody complaining except the flour interest."

About this Mr. Ambassador Choate says:

There is undoubtedly a discrimination as against flour from the United States and Canada in favor of flour coming to London from all other parts of the world. Flour is brought to London from many other parts of the world and is landed and delivered from large steamers in much the same way, and whatever cost attaches to this mode of delivery is paid by the shipowners out of the freight, no such clause as the "London clause" having been adopted.

Then why, I ask, should the Congress be expected to perpetuate this wrong? No man can say that this is right, that it is just and fair. No valid reason is given for it. Some contend that the lumbermen and flour men do not know what their interests are. That the shipowners are the real guardians of the interests of the flour and lumber men. But the fact is this London clause applies to all merchandise shipped from North Atlantic ports to London and not exclusively to flour and lumber.

Mr. Choate says that there can be no question that there is a discrimination against flour. Why, it is a known fact that there is a close competition in the shipment of wheat from this country to foreign countries, especially to France, and yet under this London clause as it is enforced now, the French miller can come to this country, buy his wheat, carry it to France, have it ground up into flour, and bring it to the port of London and be exempt entirely from the payment of 3½ cents per barrel, and then it competes with American flour.

Mr. GILBERT. I would ask if the gentleman has time to explain why the discrimination is made against this country especially? I understand the gentleman to say that that rate does not apply to flour brought in from France, from Australia, or from any other foreign port; that is applied exclusively to flour brought in from this country.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. From North American Atlantic ports.

Mr. GILBERT. Why is that?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Simply because these shipowners have formed a combination and it is to their interest to make the shippers pay that.

My third objection to this clause is because the American shipper is morally coerced to accept the contract containing the London clause or give up his business and his export trade with London.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Have they bought a quay to land this freight?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes. That is all there is in it, and when we fail to pass this bill as it is to-day, in my humble judgment, with the law facing us as it does, we will make a great mistake. These shipowners, according to the ipse dixit of their own sweet will, come here and flood the House with communications and literature asking you not to allow this bill to become a law. Why is that? It is because they say, and those who support the minority report say, it is a reasonable charge. Mr. Speaker, who is the most suitable man in a contract to determine whether the charge is reasonable or not? Is there simply one side to a contract, as in this? That is all there is in this case.

Why, my friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] could have gone one step farther in illustrating the differences between the charges at the port of London and at the port of Liverpool. Let us see just for one moment. We have immense ships now which will carry from twelve to fourteen thousand tons. Take one of 14,000 tons sailing from a North Atlantic port to the port of London. Because of the charges there the shipowner makes $19,180 more than he makes in carrying the same load to the port at Liverpool. Why is that? Let those gentlemen answer. That shipowner makes $19,180 on a ship of the same tonnage more than he does if he carries the same cargo to the port of Liverpool. He makes $16,220 more than by carrying it to the port of Glasgow.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to know why they do not exact this same clause in their contract of shipments to ports other than the London port. They, according to the contention of the gentleman from Alabama, seem to be making money out of this business.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Why, the London port is the greatest consumer of the goods of America.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. If they can make so much money by having this clause in their contract to the port of London, why not have it in the contract of shipments to other ports?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. They have better opportunities to make money by their combination and control the flour and lumber trade of the North Atlantic ports with port of London.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Why do they not exact the same stipulation in their contracts for shipments to Liverpool and other places.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I do not know. I can not tell. I am talking about the facts of this case. I am not speculating upon what might be done otherwise. This is what they have done. This is what we see they have done.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman claim they make $16,000 more on shipments to London——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes; I do, according to the estimates and figures that we have made, and that is a fact.

Mr. MANN. On a ship which carries 14,000 tons?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. MANN. On freight that they make an extra charge of 42 cents a ton for, and that that makes $16,000?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. There are, of course, other things connected with it, but those are the statistics. That I have no time to explain. There is no question about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, to save time, I ask that all speakers on this measure have leave for five days to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all persons speaking on this measure have leave for five days to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] thirty minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is known among us as the London dock bill. Its friends claim that it will affect no other port in the world except London. The terms of the bill are much broader than that and might, in fact, prohibit some of the clauses now inserted in every foreign bill of lading, no matter to what port the consignment is made. Practically all of the vessels which carry freight from this country and Canada to London, and certainly all of the great steamship lines, now insert in their bills of lading what is entitled the London clause. That clause provides, in effect, that the shipowner may disregard in the port of London the old custom of transferring the goods from the vessel direct to a barge or lighter alongside, and may land the freight at once upon the dock, assort it there, and then deliver it, after assorted, from the dock to the barge, and that for this service the consignee of the goods shall pay a certain fixed charge, which, for most articles of freight, is 1s. 9d. per ton.

The design of the pending bill, as explained by its advocates, is to prohibit the insertion in bills of lading of this so-called London clause. A full understanding of the merits of the bill requires a full understanding of the customs of the port of London, of the charter of the London Dock Company, of the laws of Great Britain in regard to the port of London and in regard to the general subject of shipping, and also of the actual practice in regard to the shipment of freight to London, the carrying of the freight there, and the unloading and delivery of it when it arrives there.

Mr. Speaker, I come to the discussion of this subject with a good deal of hesitation and with a knowledge of the meagerness of my information in regard to it.

I have always found that where a custom has grown up in commercial business there was some reason for it. When this bill was presented before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, it was with the claim, made by the very genial and able gentleman from Minneapolis [Mr. FLETCHER], whom we all greatly admire, and the brilliant and indefatigable gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], whom we often like to follow, that all of the merit and favorable arguments were upon one side. It occurred to me at that time that possibly the London landing clause was not agreed upon by all the trans-Atlantic steamship lines unless there was some good apparent reason for it. This seemed especially likely because transportation across the Atlantic is not like transportation between two railroad points. Anybody has the permission and opportunity to construct and operate a steamship. There can be no natural monopoly in transportation on the sea. The flour millers in Minnesota are not prevented from constructing their own steamships and carrying flour to London. It requires no special grant of charter or franchise from the city or legislature to run a steamship line. Anybody has the power. Aye, more—there are plenty of tramp steamers at all times carrying freight across the Atlantic Ocean. The Minneapolis millers who come before Congress with this complaint made an effort to engage tramp steamers to carry their flour across the Atlantic, but they discovered that it would cost them far more in freight without the London clause than it does now with the London clause.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me an interruption right there?

Mr. MANN. I will if it is brief.

Mr. TAWNEY. The men who employed tramp steamers gave it up, not because of the increase of freight, but because the tramp steamers were not regular in their shipments to that market, and they want regular shipments in order to accommodate their business.

Mr. MANN. Ah, Mr. Speaker, the shipments would be regular if they could get the business. There would be no trouble about the regularity of tramp steamers, for they would readily unite in forming a new company at once if they could get the business.

Mr. TAWNEY. They would not be tramp steamers if they formed a line.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken as to the reason for not shipping by tramp steamers. His own witness stated in our hearings that the reason they did not employ tramp steamers was because when they endeavored to do so they found that the freight by the tramp steamers would be about 50 per cent higher than by the regular liners.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Is it not a fact that that witness further stated that the reason these tramp steamers could not succeed was because there was a combination made between the North Atlantic liners and the dock managers in London that prohibited the tramp steamers from getting a fair show?

Mr. MANN. My friend from Alabama is mistaken. The witness did not so state. I think I speak with a thorough knowledge of the testimony in the case.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I think I do, too.

Mr. MANN. I have merely answered the question the gentleman asked me.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will endeavor in a few words to show the House why the London clause was inserted and why the abolition of the London clause would be the abolition of a discrimination in favor of American ports. The gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Alabama have stated that the London landing clause is a discrimination against North Atlantic ports. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to assert that it is a discrimination in favor of the North Atlantic ports.

Now, what are the facts? There are four great ports in Great Britain to which the freight from this country is consigned—Glasgow, Liverpool, Southampton, and London. London is the greatest city of consumption of goods, but up to within a few years little of the freight business went directly to the port of London. Freight for London was consigned to Liverpool or Southampton. Liverpool is on the side next to us, and is the nearest; Southampton is on the south coast of England, and London is on the easterly side. London is a little farther away than the other two ports. The railway charges from Liverpool and Southampton to London are quite high, and the freight going from this country to London by way of these other ports was paying a higher rate of freight than was justified by the situation. Not much of it was going directly to the port of London. Why was this?

Mr. Speaker, freight that goes to the port of London by vessel can not pass up the Thames River to the city warehouses without being unloaded from the vessel onto barges or lighters. The river has not depth sufficient to enable large ships to pass up to the city warehouses.

The expense of lightering all the freight is naturally very heavy under any circumstonces, but the expense at London was, and still is, much enhanced by the customs and special laws and charters applicable to that port which confer certain monopolies. For instance, the London and India Dock Company is a monopoly. It has exclusive control of all docks on the river Thames which foreign vessels can reach.

Mr. GILBERT. Do you mean it has control of the barges?

Mr. MANN. No; not the barges. It has control of all the docks. That company was chartered something over a century ago. Before the building of the docks the universal delivery of frieght was to deliver it overside midstream onto barges. The lighters or barges were controlled by the Watermen's Company. There was inserted in the dock company's charter a provision that the barges should be permitted not only to take freight overside from vessels midstream, but they should also be permitted to enter the docks for the same purpose without charge. It should be remembered that the tide has a rise and fall of about 15 feet on the Thames River and the vessels which go up the river go into the docks at high tide and are locked in.

The custom of the port of London is that a consignee of freight, desiring to obtain the same, can send a barge down the river to meet the incoming vessel within twenty-four hours after it is first reported, and that such barge is entitled to receive the goods from the vessel without paying any charges to the dock company. These barges have no power of propulsion. They go neither by steam nor wind. They float up and down the river on the current caused by the tide. If the barge reaches the vessel in time, it is entitled to be locked in the large dock with the vessel and is entitled to make use of the dock and receive the freight without paying any expense therefor. If the incoming vessel lies in midstream and discharges its cargo onto barges, there is, of course, no possible expense to be paid to the dock company.

If the vessel, however, enters the dock and discharges its cargo overside onto barges, the expense to the vessel is 1 shilling per ton for the rated tonnage of the vessel, which is the charge for entering the docks. If the vessel discharges its cargo onto the quay or wharf of the dock, the shipowner must pay to the dock company various additional charges for landing the goods, etc.; but the consignee, if his barge has come alongside the ship within twenty-four hours of her report, is entitled to have the goods delivered to his barge free of charge against him, dock or landing charges. If, however, the consignee has failed to have the barge alongside within twenty-four hours, then the shipowner, under the charter of the dock company, is entitled to land all of the goods on the quay, and the dock company becomes immediately entitled to assess a charge against the goods, if it so wishes, of 4 shillings per ton, though there are various rates for various articles and services.

This was the system which was in force in London until within a very recent period. A vessel going from this country to the port of London entered one of the docks, say Tillbury dock, 14 miles below London. The vessel had been reported, of course, some hours before it reached the dock. The consignee, by watching the list of reported vessels, could know that the vessel which had his goods would soon be at the dock. By making arrangements with the owner of a barge at or near the dock he could have the barge report alongside the vessel within twenty-four hours of her report, and he himself could make entry of his goods at the custom-house and obtain permission to take possession of them and give notice to the shipowner or the dock company that he desired to obtain the goods. The notice and the entry would have to be made within twenty-four hours of the report of the ship, and the barge must be alongside within that time. If this were done, he became entitled to receive his goods without paying any charge to the dock company. The vessel might deliver the goods overside the barge directly, or it might land the goods on the quay and deliver them to the barge from the quay. In either case all of the charges of the dock company were paid by the shipowner and not by the consignee.

If the goods were delivered overside they would, of course, have to be sorted on the deck of the vessel. When there were only a few consignees and a few classes of goods on the vessel this was not such a difficult thing to do, and when the vessels consisted of sailing vessels their time was not so valuable but that they might easily lie in the dock long enough to deliver overside all of the goods which had been demanded within the twenty-four hours. In fact this was the general practice at the port of London until within a comparatively recent time.

But, Mr. Speaker, with the increase in the amount of freight and the enlargement of the size of the vessels it became an impossibility to deliver the goods overside.

The big trans-Atlantic liners have a tonnage of from ten to twelve thousand tons. They carry twelve to fourteen thousand tons of freight, the amount of freight exceeding the tonnage of the vessel. They have from 500 to a thousand consignors and from 500 to a thousand consignees. They sometimes carry 75,000 sacks of flour which belong to gentlemen of Minnesota in one vessel. Now, these sacks of flour and other articles in the ship are not loaded separately by themselves. They are not put off in a part of the vessel by themselves. When the Washburn people, in Minneapolis, are manufacturing flour on the order of a dozen different people in London, they keep no account of the sacks of flour. Every sack, it is true, has a special label, but the flour is put into the sacks indiscriminately. The sacks for A and the sacks for B are not kept by themselves, but the sacks for the whole alphabet are thrown together. They are loaded on the cars indiscriminately, put into the vessels indiscriminately, and a part may be put in one portion of the vessel and another part in another portion of the vessel. It is absolutely impossible to load a big vessel with flour and load the flour in only one portion of the vessel, because it must be distributed around so as to make an even weight over the ship. The result is that when the articles arrive in London in the ship it becomes an absolute necessity that they be landed before they can be sorted and delivered.

It is quite impossible to land them overside. It is true that it might be possible to land flour overside if the vessel carried only flour, and that is why I suggested to the brilliant gentleman from Minnesota that he have his people send over flour in one vessel, and then it could all be landed overside without any London charge, without going into the dock.

Now, this method of doing business interfered with the trade at the port of London. The shipments of flour to London have nearly doubled since the landing clause was inserted in the bill of lading in 1888. There were shipped to London a little over 500,000 tons of flour in 1888, and the shipments to London from this country have gone up to over 850,000 tons of flour in 1900. The gentleman from Minnesota stated erroneously that the flour shipment from Australia was 500,000 tons. The fact is that the shipments of flour from this country are ten times as much to London, with the London landing clause in, as they are from all the rest of the world put together, with the London landing clause out as to the rest of the world.

This provision was put into the bill of lading—I have not the time to explain the matter as fully as I would like—but this provision was put into the bill of lading because under the old system it became, as I say, impossible to land the goods over side; they must be put on the dock. Under the charter of the London Dock Company the moment the goods were placed on the dock for any reason whatever the dock company became entitled to charge four shillings a ton as the consolidated dock rate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Does Mr. Choate ascribe the increase of trade at the port of London to the London dock charge?

Mr. GILBERT rose.

Mr. MANN. It was not Mr. Choate's place to make any statement one way or the other, and the gentleman from Alabama surely knows that Mr. Choate did not pass upon the matter one way or the other.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. I have it here in my hand.

Mr. MANN. I will now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. GILBERT. The gentleman is making an intelligent and interesting statement, but for my own information I want to ask why that rule should apply only to vessels coming from American ports?

Mr. MANN. I will reach that immediately. It became absolutely impossible to unload the goods from a ship carrying 14,000 tons of freight scattered indiscriminately throughout the hold of a vessel and consigned to 500 different consignees without landing them on the quay. As I say, under the London dock charter, the moment the goods were landed on the quay they became subject to a charge of 4 shillings a ton.

I do not mean to say that in every case the dock company exacted the charge of 4 shillings a ton the moment the goods were landed on the quay, but the shipowner became subject to a very high charge from the dock company. The shipowner was, of course, compelled to deliver free to the barges all of the goods which were called for within twenty-four hours, under the custom of the port. The shipowner could not, of course, tell what goods would be called for within the twenty-four hours and what would not be called for within that time. On the goods which were called for within twenty-four hours the shipowner was compelled to pay all the charges to the dock company. On the goods not called for within twenty-four hours all the shipowner was required to do under the custom of the port was to land the goods on the quay, when they became subject to the control of the dock company and the dock charges were paid by the consignee. In fact, up to 1890 the shipowner was not even permitted to do the work of landing the goods on the quay from the hold of the vessel except so far as that might be done by the men on board the vessel. Practically all the work of taking the goods out of the vessel and landing them on the quay was done, prior to 1890, by the dock company itself. Since 1891 it is done by the shipowner by making contracts with stevedores who handle the business.

As I have stated, the shipowner was compelled to stand the dock charges on all the goods which were landed on the quay and delivered to the barges, where the barges had reported alongside within twenty-four hours; and since the shipowner could not tell which goods would be called for within twenty-four hours, it became necessary to make the rate of freight high enough on all goods to cover the dock charges, even though as to a large portion of the goods the shipowner did not have to pay the dock charges at all. This made the rate of freight to London very high, and made the freight rates from our Atlantic ports to London so high that the greater portion of our shipments destined for London were made to Liverpool or Southampton to go across England by rail. This made both a higher freight rate and a longer delay than was desirable.

In November, 1884, there was a meeting of dealers interested in the provision trade in London which passed a resolution protesting against the delays and method of handling provisions at that port, and against the extra expense caused by the method of handling business there, and appointing a committee to confer with the dock and shipping companies on the subject of these grievances. This meeting expressed the sentiments of dealers in other articles in London. It was largely as a result of that meeting in 1884, or of the difficulties which inspired that meeting, that in 1888 the London landing clause was agreed upon. The shipowners interested in the carrying trade from this country to London saw that they were losing the carrying of much freight because of the unsatisfactory conditions in London in the method of delivery there, and they represented to the London Dock Company that if satisfactory arrangements could be made between the shipowners and the dock company, a very heavy increase in business could be expected between the North American ports and London.

The shipowners desired to have a reduction in the charges of the dock company. The dock company desired to have as much freight as possible landed on its docks. The shipowner desired also that the consignee might obtain a benefit of reduction in the freight rate as to those goods which were called for under the custom of the port, within twenty-four hours, and they desired that the time for bringing barges alongside might be extended and made considerably greater than twenty-four hours.

The result of these negotiations between the dock company and the interested shipowners was that they reached a basis of settlement upon terms like these: The dock charges should be very materially reduced to the shipowners. The shipowners themselves should pay the dock charges on all goods which were not turned over to the dock company by reason of failure to be called for in proper time. The consignees should have seventy-two hours instead of twenty-four hours in which to report alongside with their barges to receive the goods without additional dock charges. If the consignees reported with their barges within seventy-two hours then all the dock charges should be paid by the shipowners to the dock company, but the ordinary full rate should not be charged.

Here was a great concession on the part of the dock company to both the shipowners and the consignees. The concession in return to the dock company was that all the goods which came in the ship should pay something toward the dock charge, irrespective of whether it was landed on the quay or not. Theretofore if goods were not landed on the quay the dock company received nothing as a charge against such goods, but under the agreement which was made, the dock company is to a certain extent the beneficiary of charges levied on all the goods which go into the ship.

The ordinary charge agreed upon was 7 pence for grain unloaded overside and 1 shilling and 9 pence on most of the articles which might be landed on the quay. The agreement between the shipowners and the dock company was that there should be inserted in all the bills of lading this provision, known as the London clause, which provides that the various consignees of all the goods shall pay this fixed charge. With the payment of this charge the consignees became entitled to take their goods away by barge, van, or rail if called for within seventy-two hours of report of the ship, without additional dock charge. This clause permits the shipowner to make a rate of freight to the American shipper based solely upon the carrying of the goods to the dock in London, while the goods still remain in the hold of the ship.

Under the old system the rate of freight had to include the consolidated dock charges for goods which remained uncalled for within twenty-four hours, although, as a matter of fact, the goods might be called for and there be no consolidated dock charge levied against the goods. Under the present clause all goods pay something, but the goods which are called for within seventy-two hours do not in any case pay a high charge. The goods which are called for within seventy-two hours under the London clause pay a total cost between the time of starting them in the ship on this side of the Atlantic and the time of putting them on the barge in the Thames, much less than they would under the old system without the London landing clause.

The London clause was designed to benefit the trade from North America. It was not a discrimination against, it was a discrimination in favor of, our side of the water as against the rest of the world.

Everybody knows that in the end the goods pay the freight. It is to our interest in this country, as well as to the interest of London, to have the total of the charges of transportation between the time of leaving here and the time of landing in the warehouse there as low as possible. And that system which makes the total charge lower is better than the system which makes a particular charge lower but makes the total higher, because in the end the goods must stand the charges.

Now, under the London landing clause, the charges which are paid by the big Atlantic transports to the dock company are less than the charges paid by ships coming from other parts of the world. The 1 shilling and 9 pence per ton charges to consignees is far less than the goods pay which come from other parts of the world. The moment a vessel from Australia or India or China enters the Thames River and unloads at the quay, the goods which they land have levied upon them by the dock company a higher charge than do the goods landed by the American freighter under the London landing clause.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me one moment?

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact that the charge, whatever it is, is imposed by the law of Great Britain upon the shipowner and not upon the cargo?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman had contained his soul in patience he knows that I would not have finished my speech without answering that question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I thought you might forget it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota says that if the goods come from Australia the shipowner pays the dock charges, but if the goods come from the United States, then, under the London landing clause, the consignee pays these charges. The gentleman looks no further than the end of his well-proportioned nose. In the end the goods pay the charges. Does the gentleman from Minnesota, or any other gentleman here, believe that the cost of carrying freight from Australia will be made lower or higher because the shipowner pays the dock charges instead of the consignee paying them?

Does any gentleman here believe, as contended for by the gentleman from Minnesota, that the total carrying expense will be made less by having the shipowner pay a higher dock charge than is now paid by the consignee? Some gentlemen may say: But why will the shipowner be compelled to pay any higher charge than the consignee does now? The London Dock Company is a monopoly. It has absolutely refused, as stated in the sworn testimony before us, to make any agreement with the Atlantic freight lines, giving the present low dock charges, unless the London landing clause is inserted in the bills of lading.

The elimination of the London clause from the bills of lading would result in increased dock charges to be paid to the dock company by some one, and that means to be paid by the goods, and eventually that increased charge would fall either upon the consumer or purchaser, or upon both. Now, the custom of the port of London, as I have stated, is that the barge must meet the ship and be ready to take delivery of the goods within twenty-fours hours after report of the vessel, in order for the consignee to escape the payment of the dock charges when the London clause is not inserted. The able gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], in his argument a while ago, stated that it was not necessary to have the barge alongside the ship within twenty-four hours; but in that respect he differs with some of his own witnesses, who state that it is necessary.

In the statement made by Mr. Kingsford, president of the London Flour Trade Association, which is attached to the report of Ambassador Choate and presented to the committee by the advocates of the bill, it is stated on page 80 of the hearings:

It should be mentioned that if the merchant's barge is not alongside the ship within twenty-four hours from the date of the vessel's report, the right of obtaining free delivery is forfeited, and the dock company have the right to levy their quay dues upon the scale charged to the merchant, a right which in all circumstances is rigidly enforced.

Ambassador Choate, in his report upon the subject, makes the same statement. Some of the witnesses in behalf of the advocates of the bill have claimed that the consignee needed only to make entry of the goods at the custom-house and demand delivery within twenty-four hours, and need not have the barges alongside the ship. But Mr. McKelvey, one of the principal witnesses for the advocates of the bill, in his testimony before the committee (p. 65 of the hearings), stated that except for the agreement between the shipowners and the dock company in regard to the London landing clause the dock charge of 4 shillings a ton would attach against the goods the moment the goods are landed on the dock.

It is practically impossible for consignees either to have the barge alongside the incoming ship or to make entry of the goods and demand delivery thereof within twenty-four hours of the report of the ship in a large percentage of cases. The gentleman from Minnesota, in his statement to the House, said that it took from twenty-four to thirty-six hours after the report of the ship before she got to the dock.

Mr. TAWNEY. From eight to eighteen hours.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, this clause was put in the bill of lading because it is absolutely necessary to land the goods on the quay in order that they may be assorted and delivered, or else necessary to keep the ship in the stream or the dock from one to three weeks assorting the goods on the deck of the ship.

Gentlemen speak of this clause as if it were a matter purely in the interest of the shipowners. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is as much in the interest of the shipper to have low transportation charges as it is to the interest of the shipowner. Under the operation of the London clause we get lower freight rates between this country and London than does any other part of the world. Why? Because we can build great big ships of 12,000 tons burden. We send them across the water to the Tillbury docks on the Thames. They can be unloaded onto the quay at once, loaded immediately, and start back without waiting either in the stream or the docks for barges to obtain the delivery of the goods overside. If the London clause were abolished these ships would either be compelled to spend days or weeks in the docks making delivery overside or else pay exorbitant charges to the dock company for the privilege of landing the goods on the quay. Either way would make a considerable increase in the total cost of transportation.

At the time of the hearings before us last winter the freight rate from Australia was 30 shillings a ton on the same class of goods which from New York to London paid less than 8 shillings per ton. This difference is not warranted by the difference in distance. How do my friends on the opposite side explain this difference in freight rates? There is no London landing clause in the Australian shipment. Why does not the trade from there vastly increase if the theory of my friends on the other side is correct?

No, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the London clause saves somebody, whether the shipper, the consignee, or the shipowner, from paying a much heavier and exorbitant dock charge for the right to land the freight on the quay. What difference does it make in the long run whether the immediate payment to the dock company is made by the shipowner or the consignee? The amount is increased. In the end the increased cost falls upon the goods.

Now, I have no doubt that some of the milling people believe that the abolition of the London clause would be of advantage to them. One of their chief witnesses before our committee stated that one of the reasons the millers wanted the London clause abolished was because the abolition of it would give a preference to the flour shipper over the wheat shipper. I do not know how that may be, but there have been no grain dealers asking for the abolition of the London clause.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman permit a question for information?

Mr. MANN. Very gladly.

Mr. FLEMING. Can the gentleman give the House any statistics or figures as to what proportion of the freight cargo of an average vessel is taken off that dock within the twenty-four hours' limit?

Mr. MANN. Practically not any of it is taken off within the twenty-four-hour limit.

Mr. FLEMING. Then it is all subject to the dock charge, is it not?

Mr. MANN. Under the London clause all of the freight is subject to the charge provided for in that clause whether it is taken off within the twenty-four hours or not. The moment any of the freight is landed on the dock without the London clause it becomes subject to a dock charge, though, under the custom of the port, if it is called for in compliance with the custom within twenty-four hours, that charge is paid not by the consignee but by the shipowner. But the steamers from this country do not lie in the dock to discharge freight overside at all, except grain, which is taken out by the usual process of floating elevators, and grain pays a special charge under the London clause of 7 pence a ton. All of the rest of the freight is unloaded onto the quay for assortment on the quay or in the sheds back of the quay and delivery after assortment.

Now, the gentleman from Minnesota claims that if the London clause were abolished the consignees would be permitted to obtain their freight free of dock charges if called for within twenty-four hours after the assortment of the goods irrespective of whether their barges were alongside or they had made entry within twenty-four hours of the report of the vessel. I deny this. The gentleman from Minnesota is mistaken. He has cited here a provision of the act of Parliament of 1894. I may say that is not a new provision of law. The act of 1894, as to this provision, was a reenactment of the act of 1862, and that was a reenactment of the act of 1854, so that there is nothing new in this provision of the act of 1894. The act of 1894 provides in effect that if the consignee has his barge alongside the ship and is ready and willing to take delivery of the goods off the ship within twenty-four hours after her report, and the shipowners, instead of delivering the goods overside, choose to place them on the quay, that that must be at the expense of the shipowners; but mark you, that requires the consignee to have his barge down at the Tillbury docks, 14 miles from London, within twenty-four hours of the date of report of the ship, and keep his barge at that place until he receives the goods, which may not be for several days, and which, according to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], is sometimes not for three weeks.

Mr. TAWNEY. The statute itself is the best evidence of what it contains.

Mr. MANN. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to a provision in the statute which probably his usually very keen eye has not yet discovered. The provision of the statute to which he refers says—and the owner of the goods, at the time of that landing, has made entry and is ready and offers to take delivery thereof.

That means the barge alongside. But the gentleman has not read the statute clear through. That is his difficulty.

Mr. TAWNEY. Read the first two lines of that same paragraph and the gentleman will see that it does not apply to overside delivery at all.

Mr. MANN. Well, I was not applying it to overside delivery. I was applying it to landing the goods on the quay.

The section reads:

If any goods are, for the purpose of convenience in assorting the same, landed at the wharf where the ship is discharged, and the owner of the goods at the time of that landing has made entry and is ready and offers to take delivery thereof, and to convey the same to some other wharf or warehouse, the goods shall be assorted at landing, and shall, if demanded, be delivered to the owner thereof within twenty-four hours after assortment, and the expense of and consequent upon that landing and assortment shall be borne by the shipowner.

That means a barge alongside. The section of the statute which I have read very nearly states the custom of the port of London, but this provision of the statute itself has no application to the port of London. The difficulty with the gentleman from Minnesota is that he has seen something brilliant and picked it up and taken it home in the fond belief that it is pure gold, but he will now find it was only quartz.

The act of 1894 is known as the consolidated merchants' act. Section 501 of that act is as follows:

Nothing in this part of this act shall take away or abridge any powers given by any local act to any harbor authority, body corporate, or persons, whereby they are enabled to expedite the discharge of ships or the landing or delivery of goods; nor shall anything in this part of this act take away or diminish any rights or remedies given to any shipowner or wharfinger or warehouseman by any local act.

Now, it is claimed by the shipowners that this provision of the statute absolutely excepts the port of London from the provision relied upon by the gentleman from Minnesota. London has a special charter for the dock company, and under that charter it has special provisions designed to expedite the discharge of ships and the landing and delivery of goods, and also certain rights conferred upon shipowners, etc.

All the testimony in this case given by residents of London is to the effect that under the London local custom and law it is necessary to have the barge alongside within twenty-four hours of report of the vessel, and that the provision of the statute which the gentleman from Minnesota relies upon does not, therefore, apply to the port of London.

The advocates of this bill have given the impression that the charge made under the London clause was simply for the landing of the goods upon the dock, but the charge includes much more than that. First, it includes seventy-two hours' time instead of twenty-four in which to make entry and demand delivery of the goods. Upon the subject of what this charge was for, Ambassador Choate, in his report upon this matter, states:

The 1 shilling 9 pence charge which is the subject of the present contention is made not for discharging the goods from the ship onto the quay, which is still borne by the steamship companies and is a heavy cost, but for the accommodation, shelter, and care of the goods upon the quay and for all the labor done upon them from the moment they touch the quay until they are delivered to the barges, including sorting, piling, and removing.

I might add, on the matter of removal, that under the London clause shipowners not only put the goods upon the dock, assort them, and take care of them, but deliver them from the dock to the side of the barge when called for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have at least ten minutes more, and I ask the gentleman from New York if he will yield me that much time?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois ten minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have asked this additional ten minutes' time because the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] read to the House a petition from the export provision trade of the city of Chicago. I may say to the House that that was a petition which I presented here myself and laid before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It was a petition strongly urging the passage of this bill. But when I presented that petition I had been sitting in the committee room listening to the hearings upon this bill, and had about come to the conclusion that it was to the interest of the American shipper to have the London landing clause remain in the bill of lading rather than to have it taken out; and although I had this petition presented to me, signed by such houses as Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Libby, McNeill & Libby, and other exporting companies, including the largest exporters in the provision trade in our country, I questioned to myself their judgment as to the bill, and I requested some of the gentlemen who had signed the petition to make a reinvestigation of the subject which so concerned the American export trade and then inform me, after their reinvestigation, what their new judgment was. I expected to be largely guided in my action upon this bill by the judgment of the actual exporters of goods from this country to London.

I have here letters and telegrams addressed to me from nearly all of the gentlemen who signed the petition which my friend from Minnesota has read to the House, and I will read these to the House for information. Here is one from the attorneys for Swift & Co. and Libby, McNeill & Libby:

Swift & Co., by its second vice-president, Mr. Louis F. Swift, and Libby, McNeill & Libby by its general counsel, Albert H. Veeder, signed a petition addressed to the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, dated February 13, 1901, and which was in support of an amendment to the Harter bill, now generally known as the London landing clause bill, and which amendment has, we understand, passed the Senate and is now before the House and will be up to-morrow. This petition was signed by these companies before they had given the matter due consideration, and they have now become convinced, after careful investigation, that the passage of the bill will be detrimental to their interests, and we wish that you would have the names of these companies stricken from the petition, or take such action as will indicate that these companies are not in favor of the amendment.

Sincerely, yours,

ALBERT H. & HENRY VEEDER.

Under date of February 13, 1902, we signed a petition, and used our influence with other packers for their signatures to the same, addressed to the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, in which we favored legislation, now pending before Congress, for an amendment to the Harter Act, which we believe is commonly known as the London landing clause bill.

Since that time we have investigated and have obtained further information on the subject, and are now of the opinion that the passage of this amendment to the Harter Act would cause a reversion to a very antiquated and unsatisfactory state of affairs with reference to the discharge of cargo at London, and possibly at other ports.

In changing our position on this legislation, it is because we feel that our interests and those of the general shipping trade of the United States would be injured rather than benefited by this legislation.

We ask your very careful consideration of this matter, and hope you will see fit to use your influence in opposing the measure, which we understand is still pending in the House.

Yours, respectfully,

BOYD, LUNHAM & CO.
HENRY ZEISS.

Here is a telegram from another of the petitioners:

We consider passage amended Harter Act would be very injurious our export trade, and earnestly request your effort to defeat same.

FRIEDMAN MANUFACTURING CO.

Here is another from Armour & Co.:

Having given the subject covered by the bill known as the "London clause" bill, which passed the Senate during the first session of the present Congress, and which will come before the House during the ensuing session, considerable investigation, we feel that we should advise you that we desire to withdraw our name from the petition in its favor heretofore presented.

We believe from information we have received from our London house and others that the advantages that have been claimed for the proposed change in bills of lading would be more than offset by the unsatisfactory service necessarily incident to new conditions, and in view of this we do not, ourselves, wish to further advocate any change from the existing custom.

Regretting that we are obliged to recede from a position in which we solicited your valuable aid, and thanking you for the assistance then afforded by you, we are,

Yours, truly,

ARMOUR & CO.

Here is another to the same effect from another one of the petitioners, A. S. White & Co., in which they say:

Our consignees have made no complaints, and the existing charges at the port of London, in comparison with other ports, are very fair, etc.

I have various other telegrams and letters here from other of the petitioners which I will not take time to read, but they are all of the same import.

I wish to call the attention of the House, however, to a letter from one of the principal exporting and importing agents in the United States—George W. Sheldon & Co.—men who do not export or import on their own account, but act only as agents, and hence are interested only in favor of the people whose agency they accept. There is no one in the country whose considered judgment I would more readily accept upon a subject relating to exports or imports than this firm. Their letter is as follows:

We are the shipping agents for a large number of manufacturers who are shipping their products to London, and having our own offices in London come in direct contact with the delivery of the goods at destination and the charges incident thereto. Franklin's testimony in connection with London dock charges is in exact accord with the facts under present conditions, and clearly sets forth what will happen if the proposed law in connection therewith is enacted. We are personally acquainted with the dock officials in London and had personal conference with them there in November, and we know they will hail with much satisfaction the enactment of the proposed legislation. On behalf, therefore, of hundreds of exporters whom we represent we most vigorously protest against the enactment of a law which will increase the present cost of delivery of goods in London.

We are the largest shippers in the United States from New York to London of manufactured goods, and are therefore in a position to state that if the proposed legislation is enacted, our customers, who number hundreds, will pay annually to the London and India Dock Company thousands of dollars, which they will not have to pay if this proposed legislation is defeated.

At our London office we are in daily, in fact we may say in hourly contact, with the London and India Dock Company, and we are therefore able to make our statements positive, and to ask you to lend your assistance to defeat a measure which would put into the pockets of the Britishers thousands of dollars per annum, which, if it occurs, must of a necessity be contributed by the manufacturers of this country.

In the interest, therefore, of the exporting industries of the United States, we implore you to use every possible effort to defeat the measure.

Yours truly,

G. W. SHELDON & CO.

Mr. Speaker, in 1891 some ships were sent from Chicago through to the port of London. The gentleman who organized the company is one of the principal grain exporters of Chicago, Mr. Charles Counselman. His theoretical experience led him to believe with the advocates of this bill. It was stated by one of the witnesses in his testimony that Mr. Counselman did not insert the London landing clause in his bill of lading. When my attention was called to this statement I thought that here was an opportunity to get at some real experience, and I wired to Mr. Counselman asking him to state his experience in the matter. Here is the reply, which was sent to a good many members of the House at the same time:

Before loading steamers last year Chicago London I considered the landing clause for manipulating cargo on dock in London after discharging from steamers obnoxious, and proposed not inserting same in bills of lading, but after steamers arrived there found it impracticable attempt handle steamers and cargo without such conditions; therefore consider passage of Tawney bill would be very disadvantageous to shippers and the export trade of the United States, as well as steamship owners.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to have detained the House so long upon such a dry subject, and beg to thank the members for their considerate attention. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania fifteen minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been so thoroughly discussed upon the side of its opponents that I should hesitate to say anything about it did I not desire to call the attention of the House to some matters that have not been referred to. The gentleman who opened the debate said that there was nothing new in the policy of this bill, that it was simply an amendment to the Harter Act. It seems to me that an examination of the bill discloses the fact that there is no similarity at all between the Harter Act and its provisions.

The Harter Act provides that it shall not be lawful for a common carrier to insert in a bill of lading an agreement that relieves him from the performance of his common-law obligations; in other words, an agreement that secures him against the payment of damages for acts which are the results of his own negligence. The Harter Act simply enforces by statute the obligation of the common carrier that existed by the common law. This proposes, on the other hand, to make that unlawful and punishable which is now lawful. The language of the bill is:

That it shall not be lawful for the manager, agent, master, or owner of any vessel transporting merchandise or property from or between ports of the United States and foreign ports to insert in any bill of lading or shipping document any clause, covenant, or agreement whereby there is imposed on any such merchandise or property, or on the consignee or consignees thereof, the payment of any port, harbor, dock, landing, or sorting charges, or charges of any kind for the discharge and delivery thereof, the payment of which is imposed on the manager, agent, master, or owner, or any persons or agencies other than the consignee or consignees thereof, by the laws, statutes, or customs of the foreign country or countries to which such merchandise or property shall be transported, etc.

In other words, this is a proposition to make it unlawful to enter into a contract that is now lawful though the parties thereto be competent and willing. It is therefore, in my judgment, an unconstitutional limitation of the right of private contract.

Now, the only answer made to that is the answer made by the gentleman from Alabama, who cites to us the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of a common carrier which had put into its bills of lading a condition which the shipper had to accept upon the alternative of not shipping his goods.

But that is not this case. It appears that the contract sought to be inhibited has been voluntarily entered into for fourteen years by shippers of merchandise to the port of London by these North Atlantic steamships, and of all these shippers, thousands of them, who have entered into that contract, only a very few citizens of Minnesota say that the contract is an unfair one.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Is it not a fact that since 1888 the millers and lumber interests have been protesting against this?

Mr. DALZELL. I have read this record thoroughly, and I am unable to find any protest or anything to contradict the statement I have made—that thousands of shippers of merchandise have voluntarily entered into this engagement and are still willing to enter into it.

In other words, of all the thousands of shippers engaged in the export of goods from the various ports of the United States only a few—only the shippers of flour—are now here asking us to declare that it shall be unlawful for the great majority of shippers to make this contract, though they are perfectly willing to enter into it. Without dwelling further on that proposition, I submit that this is an unconstitutional limitation of the right of private contract.

But, furthermore, this is not such a bill as its advocates have discussed. How many gentlemen are there in this House, I ask, who understand that this is not a bill that relates simply to the port of London? I know that the argument has been made by all its advocates that this is a bill that relates only to the port of London. But where, I ask my friend, do you find within the four corners of the bill anything that justifies that assertion? It relates not to the port of London alone, but to every port in the United States and to every port in the world, civilized and uncivilized, between which ports ships go.

Mr. TAWNEY. Provided the law of the country to which the goods are shipped imposes these charges.

Mr. DALZELL. I am coming to that in a moment. It relates to the transportation of merchandise or property between the ports of the United States and foreign ports, and beyond that there is no limitation in it. It is not confined to London or to any other port in the world. But more than that, it does not refer to London customs, London dock charges, or any particular charges whatever. It relates to the payment of any port charges, harbor charges, dock charges, landing or sorting charges, charges of any kind for discharge or delivery in any port of the world.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman allow me a question? Is not the bill better for that? If it does include all these other places besides London, is it not better for that reason? Does it not on a larger scale prevent people from entering into contracts that are injurious?

Mr. DALZELL. It extends to every port in the world and to all the various kinds of charges mentioned here—port charges, and others—and it denies to the American carrier the right to reimburse himself for such various charges in every part of the world; and they are probably as varied and as many as there are ports in the world.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, if the gentleman will allow me, I do not think he wants to misstate the facts.

Mr. DALZELL. I can not yield; my time is limited.

Mr. TAWNEY. The qualification is ports where, by the law of the country, these charges are imposed on the steamship company, and it is only to those ports that this bill applies.

Mr. DALZELL. Very well. Then it refers to every port in the civilized and uncivilized world the government of which may see fit to impose on the American shipowner a charge that ought to be paid by the consignee, and that London is the only port in the world where that is done or may be done, we have no information.

Suppose, for example, a case where the port charge for entry or any other of these named charges should be equal to the whole amount of the freight received by the American carrier, this bill denies him the right in such case to reimburse himself for that charge in addition to his freight, for, as I have said, it includes all charges of every possible kind. So that this bill, instead of being a bill for a special case, as has been argued, is a general bill, and the result of its passage no man living can foresee. If the bill be such as its advocates contend, then it is an attempt under the guise of general legislation to enact special legislation of the most dangerous character. It is the most dangerous piece of legislation, in my judgment, that has come under my observation since I have been a member of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have not time to dilate further on that proposition, and I have not the time, as I expected to have, to go into the reasons why it is fair to impose these charges on the consignee. By reason of an ancient custom of London, and by reason of a Parliamentary statute of England, it has been made impossible to transact modern commercial business in the port of London according to modern methods. It is a fair deduction from a decision of the high court of justice of England that the only way by which the trammels that by English custom and law are put upon the transaction of modern business according to modern methods in the port of London can be avoided is by making just such a contract as is made here.

I quote from the report of our ambassador to the Court of St. James, Mr. Choate, made to the State Department:

In 1891, after the rate of this dock charge on flour had been advanced to 1s. 6d. per ton, Borrowman, Phillips & Co., London merchants, consignees of flour under one of these bills of lading, wishing to contest it, brought suit against the Wilson Line in the high court of justice, Queen's Bench division, to recover the 1s. 6d. paid under protest, after an offer to take the goods overside by lighter. The case was tried before two eminent judges, Mr. Justice Day and Mr. Justice Lawrence, and judgment was given against the plaintiff.

In the opinion of the court, delivered by Mr. Justice Day, it was held that although there was no doubt that by the custom of the port of London the owner of goods is entitled, if he makes application within twenty-four hours, to have his goods delivered into lighters, yet this right was subject to special agreement, and here the parties had otherwise agreed.

In answer to the claim of the same right by statute, he said: "If you can contract yourself out of the common law—i. e., customary right—so also you can contract yourself out of the statute law;" and he held that the plaintiffs had done so, and that it was perfectly clear that the plaintiffs could not recover.

The learned judge who rendered the opinion said:

The "London clause" has been entered into, it is stated, by shipowners and merchants in London for the purpose of expediting business. It contains most reasonable provisions which are almost necessary for the conduct of commercial business in these times, and when one finds immense vessels coming into the port of London, it is ridiculous to have applicable to such vessels and to such cargoes the old custom of the port of London, which was no doubt very applicable to small vessels containing very limited cargoes indeed. * * *

If the shipowner had entered into this contract for the purpose merely of pecuniary benefit, he would have been entitled to the benefit of the contract. It is quite clear, however, that it is not merely for pecuniary benefit, but that it is to the interest of all parties concerned that their goods should be delivered in the most convenient manner, and so as to enable them always to get their goods within the shortest possible time.

It is conceded by the advocates of this measure—and therein, as it seems to me, they give away their whole case—that the consignees might still be compelled to pay these charges if the carrier would include them in his freight, but it is said that if included in the freight an opportunity for competition would be given that does not now exist.

Why, sir, there could be no more unfounded statement. Opportunity for competition exists now. Suppose, for example, that under the present method A, B, C, and D are steamship companies carrying goods to London. Each and every one of them has a London dock clause in its bill of lading. There is nothing to prevent A saying, "B carries your freight at 8 cents a ton to London; we will carry it at 7 cents a ton, or at 6 cents a ton." So you see that competition is as fully open to-day under this method of doing business as it would be if the charges were included in the freight rates.

Now, just one word more. This method of doing business conforms business methods at London to the business as it is done in all the ports of Great Britain. The simple difference is that the result is accomplished at London through the medium of this agreement, whereas in the other ports it is accomplished through the medium of a statute of Parliament.

The same charges that are paid by the consignees at London under the contract made with the shipowners are paid by the consignees at Glasgow, Liverpool, Southampton, and Bristol, by reason of Parliamentary statutes which regulate the whole business. So that, in a single word, the effect of this agreement is to strike down the antiquated methods of doing business in the port of London in the interest of the American shippers and to make them conform to modern methods. Pass this bill, and you pass a bill in the interest of the foreign consignee and against the American exporter and the American shipowner.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] now occupy some portion of his time?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the affirmative side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has thirty-five minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] fifteen minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] desires to close the debate, he being a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I said at the outset that I intended to ask for the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill, the Senate bill having passed that body and having been reported to the House. I desire now to make that motion. I do not want to interrupt the debate. I wish to ask the Chair whether, under the rules, if that motion is made at 25 minutes past 4 o'clock, time will be given for the disposition of the question before the final vote on the bill, or whether the final vote would interrupt the proceedings for the substitution of the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House the vote is to be taken at half past 4 o'clock.

Mr. TAWNEY. My inquiry of the Chair is whether, if the motion to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill should not be disposed of at half past 4 o'clock, the vote would be taken at once on the bill, or whether the proceedings for substitution would be concluded?

Mr. MANN. Is it not the order that at half past 4 the vote is to be taken on the pending motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the judgment of the Chair, the vote under the order of the House is to be taken at half past 4 upon whatever may be pending at that time. In the order there is no mention made of amendments, but evidently, if amendments were offered, they would be in order and would be voted upon at half past 4.

Mr. MANN. The order was not to take the vote on the bill at half past 4, but to take "the vote" at half past 4.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will then ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill, and that that bill be substituted for the House bill, and the final vote taken upon the House bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. To that, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 1792 and that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman from Minnesota makes that motion now, or gives notice that he intends to make it?

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the motion now, and ask that it be considered as pending during the remainder of the debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion which has precedence over that. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that it be understood that that motion is pending?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman makes this motion now, I desire my motion to be acted upon, as it takes precedence of his. Further, I raise the point of order on the gentleman's motion to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. No such motion can be made until the Senate bill is either on the Speaker's table or in possession of the House. It is now in the possession of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I raise the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I move that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire his motion put now?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I move to strike out the enacting clause of the pending bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to interpose a point of order against the motion that the gentleman from Minnesota makes. It is not competent at this time to move that question, in my judgment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will pass on the point of order when the proper time comes. The motion of the gentleman from New York takes precedence. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the enacting clause of the pending bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from New York if he will not consider both motions as pending and proceed with the remainder of the debate?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on both motions that the order of the House is that a vote shall be taken at half past 4, and that debate should continue until that time.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is nothing in the order with reference to debate, if I remember correctly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is nothing to prevent the House taking any action it sees fit.

Mr. MANN. Is it within the province of the House now to change the unanimous-consent order?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks so. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we may as well dispose of it now, inasmuch as we have it up. I believe the House is ready.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the enacting clause of the pending bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, is that debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that it is not. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were—ayes 92, noes 87.

Mr. TAWNEY and Mr. MORRIS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 132, answered "present" 3, not voting 83; as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

SALES OF OSAGE INDIAN LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of May 10, 1902, a report from the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office relative to the money received from the sale of the Osage ceded and the Osage trust and the diminished reserve lands in the State of Kansas; which, on motion of Mr. HARRIS, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7956) providing additional districts for the recording of all instruments required by law to be recorded in the Indian Territory; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, December 20, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian Monday, January 5, 1903; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented a petition of the Creditmen's Association, of Rochester, N. Y., praying for the passage of the so-called Ray bankruptcy bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation relative to a reduction of the tax on distilled spirits; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE. I present several telegrams, in the nature of petitions, from business firms of Boston, Mass., relative to the tea duty as affected by a recent decision of the circuit court. The matter is pressing and demands immediate action. I move that the names of the firms be printed in the RECORD and that the telegrams be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

The names of the firms referred to are as follows: Cobb, Bates & Yerka Company, Boston, Mass.; Thomas Wood & Co., Boston, Mass.; Dudley Hall, Boston, Mass.; Winslow, Rand & Watson, Boston, Mass.; Howard W. Spurr Coffee Company, Boston, Mass.; Briggs Seaver Company, Boston, Mass.; H. S. Brown & Co., Boston, Mass.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of 15 ex-Union soldiers of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the pensions of soldiers and sailors who lost limbs in the service; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the State Board of Trade of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the State Board of Trade of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation for the Territory of Alaska to open the land to settlement and the mineral wealth of that district to the industry of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. QUARLES presented the petition of A. M. Grau and 94 other citizens of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the internal-revenue laws relative to a reduction of the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Marshfield, Wis., remonstrating against the admission into the Union of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of George McKerrow, superintendent of the Farmers' Institute of the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis., praying that an appropriation be made for the establishment of a bureau of farmers' institutes in the Department of Agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the common council of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the commemoration of the semicentennial anniversary of the commencement of the construction of the ship canal between Lake Huron and Lake Superior, at the falls of the St. Marys River, in the State of Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PATTERSON presented a memorial of the Business Men's Association of Pueblo, Colo., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to exclude from the United States all aliens over 15 years of age who can not read or write; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DRYDEN presented the petition of H. M. Nevius, of Redbank, N. J., and the petition of Joseph C. Stevens, of Bloomfield, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the pensions of soldiers and sailors who lost limbs in the service; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of A. M. Cory, of New Providence, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to contract surgeons in the war of 1861; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented memorials of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Society of Haddonfield; of William W. Casselberry, of Haddonfield, and of Samuel J. Curran, of Haddonfield, all in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the admission into the Union of the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of D. K. Bayne, president of the Trenton Potteries Company, of Trenton, N. J., praying for the admission into the Union of the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of H. B. H. Sleght, of Newark, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of James F. Rustling, of Trenton, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the purchase of Temple Farm, at Yorktown, Va., for the purposes of a national park; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented the memorial of P. Sanford Ross, of Jersey City, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation extending the hydraulic dredge patents of A. B. Bowers for a period of seventeen years; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of Joseph Smolinski, representing the Polish-American organization of America, of Washington, D. C., praying for the erection of a bronze equestrian statue to the memory of the Revolutionary hero Pulaski; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I have received a very large number of resolutions and telegrams relating to the statehood bill, which will come up this afternoon, with the request that they be read in the Senate and entered in the RECORD.

I do not think it is worth while to go to the trouble of having them read. I would be glad to have a few of them, which are typical in their character, read, and the rest may go into the RECORD or not, as the Senate shall determine. I prefer that they should go in if there be no objection, as telegrams have been printed in the RECORD on the other side of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania first send to the desk those he desires to have read?

Mr. QUAY. I will do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the telegrams sent to the desk? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

POND CREEK, OKLA., November 29, 1902.

At a mass meeting of the citizens of Grant County held at the court-house in Pond Creek on this 29th day of November, 1902, the following resolution was offered and unanimously passed:

"Resolved, That the people of Grant County, Okla., having a population of over 20,000, do ignore the so-called statehood convention to be held at Claremore December 3, because it is a deception to miscarry the will of the people of this Territory in their desire for immediate admission to statehood. We refuse to send any delegates to such a meeting. We desire the passage of the 'omnibus bill' just as it passed the House. We desire statehood for New Mexico and Arizona as well as for ourselves. It is the just right of the pioneers of these Territories to have the blessings of full American citizenship now. They have added hundreds of millions of wealth to the nation; they have offered blood in the defense of its flag. They pay tribute in a vast trade to the States whose Senators would deprive them of the rights that they inherit from the founders of this Republic. We vote our heartfelt thanks to the Senators on the floor who rise to a plane of statesmanship equal to that of our fathers and who would hail new stars in the flag of the greatest and most progressive nation on earth. That we send a copy to our Delegate for Senator QUAY."

J. N. DECK, President.
H. J. WASSON, Secretary.

ELRENO, OKLA., December 8, 1902.

Hon. MATTHEW S. QUAY,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At a mass meeting of citizens of Elreno, Okla., the following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved, first, That, in our judgment, nine-tenths of the people of Oklahoma, irrespective of party affiliations, favor the immediate passage of the omnibus statehood bill, and are opposed to the substitute bill.

"Resolved, second, That the people of Elreno earnestly request our Delegate to Congress, Senator MATTHEW S. QUAY, and all other friends of Oklahoma to use all honorable means to secure the passage of the omnibus statehood bill."

DICK T. MORGA, Chairman.
D. W. PEERY, Secretary.

GUTHRIE, OKLA., December 9, 1902.

Senator M. S. QUAY, Washington, D. C.:

Oklahoma is with you in your fight for the omnibus bill. The people declared for this bill when it was the sole issue at the last election. They are unalterably opposed to the substitute bill.

F. L. WINNER
(And 100 others).

PERRY, OKLA., December 9, 1902.

Senator QUAY, Washington, D. C.:

Political platforms should now be as sacred as they were then solemn. Reminding both parties that their national honor is now at test, we hope, ask, and beg for the omnibus bill's immediate passage.

William T. Little, postmaster; A. E. Smyser, mayor; R. E. Wade, president Commercial Club; C. D. Jensen, secretary Perry Commercial Club; Farmers and Merchants' Bank, Perry, Okla.; Exchange Bank; Noble County Bank; L. G. Shoop, register of deeds; H. A. Smith, probate judge; H. P. Larsh, county clerk; W. W. Faulds, county treasurer; W. T. Little.

HOLDENVILLE, IND. T., December 9, 1902.

Hon. M. S. QUAY, Washington, D. C.:

For best interest of all, would request that you urge passage of omnibus bill without Senate amendment.

W. S. HASTON.

HOBART, OKLA., December 10, 1902.

We are in favor of omnibus bill.

JOHN D. APPLEBY.

CHAS. H. LAMBA.
H. H. HADLOCK.

Hon. M. S. QUAY, Washington, D. C.

HOLDENVILLE, IND. T., December 10, 1902.

I earnestly protest against the passage of Senate amendment to omnibus bill and recommend passage of statehood bill without embracing Indian Territory.

L. WALKER.

Hon. M. S. QUAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

ELRENO, OKLA., December 9, 1902.

The people of Canadian County, Okla., demand the passage of the omnibus statehood bill, in accordance with promises held forth during the campaign, and are greatly alarmed at press reports, indicating a delay and showing a purpose to substitute some different measure.

CANADIAN COUNTY REPUBLICAN CENTRAL COMMITTEE,
By HENRY LASSEN, Chairman.

Senator MATT. QUAY, Washington, D. C.

GUTHRIE, OKLA., December 9, 1902.

The substitute statehood bill should not pass; Indian Territory entirely unprepared. People of Oklahoma are almost unanimous for the omnibus bill.

CHAS. E. BILLINGSLEY,
President Capital National Bank.

Senator MATT. QUAY, Washington, D. C.

ELRENO, OKLA., December 9, 1902.

Hon. M. S. QUAY, Washington, D. C.:

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the common council of the city of Elreno relative to the omnibus statehood bill now pending in the Senate:

"Be it resolved by the mayor and council of the city of Elreno in special session assembled, Whereas we are informed that certain parties are endeavoring to make it appear to the Senate that the people of Oklahoma are opposed to the passage of the omnibus statehood bill: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That we as a body and as individuals hereby denounce such representations as untrue and calculated to mislead the Senate as to the wishes of the people of Oklahoma as regards statehood: Therefore,

"Be it further resolved, That we hereby declare ourselves in favor of the passage of the omnibus bill and are unalterably opposed to the substitute therefor; and, further, we believe these sentiments are shared in by nineteen-twentieths of the people of Oklahoma."

Passed and approved this the 9th day of December, 1902.

SIDNEY L. CLUTE, Clerk.

HOLDENVILLE, IND. T., December 10, 1902.

Senator M. S. QUAY, Washington, D. C.:

Please urge passage of omnibus bill, and defeat, if possible, Senate amendment, as to best interests of Indian Territory.

NATIONAL BANK OF HOLDENVILLE.

RIPLEY, OKLA., December 10, 1902.

Senator MATTHEW S. QUAY, Washington, D. C.:

City officials and business men of Ripley indorse the Flynn bill; we wish you godspeed in your able fight for the passage of measure.

ELRENO, OKLA., December 9, 1902.

Hon. M. S. QUAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Omnibus bill our desire. Beveridge bill opposed.

N. S. ENGLE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These resolutions and telegrams in the nature of petitions will lie on the table, the bill having been reported.

Mr. QUAY. I now send——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If they are in the nature of petitions, why are they read to the Senate and put in the RECORD?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to whose request unanimous consent was asked and given.

Mr. QUAY. I now send to the clerks' desk some that I do not desire to have read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I desire to say merely a word on this practice. I would prefer to have said it when the telegrams related to something else, and therefore I do not make any particular objection with reference to this matter, but it seems to me that at the same time we have got to consider whether every telegram which any person in the United States sees fit to send to a Senator is to be read to the Senate and printed in the RECORD.

Of course all know what the rules are. I know that the Senator who has a telegram, if objection is made, can rise and read it himself and that it will go into the RECORD; but I can not help thinking that this practice has been somewhat extended beyond any proper limits.

While, as I said, I would very much prefer to have made these remarks in relation to telegrams upon some other subject—one that did not excite particular interest—I think it is quite timely that attention should be called to the practice. If it goes on by the time we get to the end of the session we shall have anywhere from 300 to 1,000 pages of the RECORD filled with telegrams. I do not think we ought to burden our CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in that way. By the rules petitions are not to be put into the RECORD. The exception made is in the case of memorials of State legislatures and resolutions passed by State legislatures.

While, as I said, I make no special objection in this case, because I know there is feeling in the Senate upon the subject to which the telegrams relate, I hope that some action may be taken so that hereafter it will not be understood that every telegram which is sent can be presented to the Senate and the time of the Senate taken up in reading them and have the RECORD filled with that sort of petitions.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I was in my seat when the Senator from Pennsylvania presented these petitions, and the thought which the Senator from Connecticut has expressed occurred to me. But where a people are petitioning for self-government, involving a matter so important as the question under what government they shall live, whether it shall remain Territorial, or what shall be the limits of their State if it came in, it seemed to me that the importance and interest of the question and the peculiar relation of the people, they having no representative on the floor of the Senate, warranted an exception to the ordinary practice in this case.

So I did not object; but, on the contrary, I thought the course taken by the Senator from Pennsylvania was absolutely right. Although I am not in favor of the view taken by the petitioners, it does seem to me that they are entitled to a special and peculiar hearing other than that which is accorded ordinarily to petitioners.

Mr. BATE. Besides, Mr. President, it will be remembered by the Senate that at least one telegram, which was very long and which it required a great while to read, was presented by the chairman of the Committee on Territories the other day on the other side of this question. I thought myself it was eminently proper that these telegrams should come in as an offset to that one and enlighten the Senate as to the opinions of those people. I believe the course taken was right, and the idea thrown out by the Senator from Massachusetts is certainly a correct one, that this is a case which involves the life of their government, the question being whether they ought to come into the Union as a State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania has sent to the desk a very large number of telegrams, which he asks shall be printed in the RECORD. That question was not put to the Senate at all. Does the Senate consent that these telegrams shall be printed in the RECORD? Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to say that hereafter with relation to other matters I shall make objection to this course of procedure. I do not object to this particular matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 6509) granting an increase of pension to Marion F. White; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WELLINGTON introduced a bill (S. 6510) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles E. Mitchell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 6511) to exempt from taxation certain property of the American Institute of Architects in Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 6512) to extend the jurisdiction of the United States courts, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. QUAY. The bill relates merely to Indians, but I think I will ask to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary originally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DEPEW introduced a bill (S. 6513) granting a pension to Thomas Allen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 6514) granting an increase of pension to Stephen J. Houston; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 6515) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SOPHIA BOWIE.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Sophia Bowie, widow of Albert Bowie, late an employee in the Senate stables, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS IN CONNECTICUT.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have been requested to introduce the following resolution and I comply with the request not because I wish to be committed to the project which is embraced in the resolution, but because I wish to comply with all reasonable requests.

The resolution was referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Postmaster-General be, and hereby is, directed to report to the Senate the amounts of salaries of all postmasters in the State of Connecticut, for the terms of service specified, whose names and terms of service appear on the schedule of such cases in said State hereto attached, adjusted under the act of 1854, and the amount of the salary of each such postmaster adjusted and paid under the act of 1864, so that the difference between the salary paid and the amount of salary ordered paid by the act of 1883 shall appear in each case specified on the said schedule.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. BURROWS submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Postmaster-General be, and hereby is, directed to report to the Senate the amounts of salaries of all postmasters in the State of Michigan, for the terms of service specified, whose names and terms of service appear on the schedule of such cases in said State hereto attached, adjusted under the act of 1854, and the amount of the salary of each such postmaster adjusted and paid under the act of 1864, so that the difference between the salary paid and the amount of salary ordered paid by the act of 1883 shall appear in each case specified on the said schedule.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the printing as a document of a part of Document No. 188, first session, Fifty-sixth Congress, and the latter part of the isthmian canal report, which contains the correspondence between M. Hutin and Admiral Walker. The first part consists of letters addressed by the New Panama Canal Company to the President and the Secretary of State. Document No. 188 has been printed, but it is out of print now, and it contains a number of maps. It would be quite expensive to print that document, so I combine the two. This document was printed for the use of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and is in type and it will require nothing but to strike it off.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for printing as a document certain papers which he sends to the desk. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7956) providing additional districts for the recording of all instruments required by law to be recorded in the Indian Territory was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, December 20, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, January 5, 1903.

OMNIBUS STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, the statehood bill will come before the Senate this afternoon. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Territories has in the course of preparation a report, but it has not yet appeared in this body. The Senator who represents the thought of the gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber is also preparing a report, but he seems to be disposed to await the pleasure of the chairman of the committee. I am a sort of political orphan upon that committee, and as a dissenting member of the committee, certainly from the majority report, and it may be, possibly, from some of the conclusions of the minority, I have drawn a report of my own, which I now present to the Senate, and I should like to have the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania presents a report touching the omnibus statehood bill and asks that it be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Does the Senator desire to have the House report, which is embodied in it, read?

Mr. QUAY. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

VIEWS OF MR. QUAY.

As a member of the Committee on Territories, I dissent from the report of the majority on House bill No. 12543, and assent to the able and unanimous report submitted on this bill by the Committee on the Territories of the House of Representatives, which I adopt and make a part of this report, as follows:

[House Report No. 1309, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

ADMISSION OF CERTAIN TERRITORIES INTO THE UNION.

"April 1, 1902. Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

"Mr. KNOX, from the Committee on the Territories, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 12543):

"The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred H. R. 2, "To enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;" H. R. 152, "To enable the people of Oklahoma to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;" H. R. 2015, "To enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;" H. R. 4570, "To authorize single statehood for Oklahoma and Indian Territories as the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes;" H. R. 9675, "To provide for the union of Oklahoma Territory and the Indian Territory, and to enable the people thereof to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union as the State of Oklahoma on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to said State;" H. R. 11802, "To enable the people of Oklahoma to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;" H. R. 11992, "To enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original State;" H. R. 11995, "To enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;" H. R. 12543, "To enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," have considered said bills and report back H. R. 12543 without amendment and recommend that it pass.

"The bill provides enabling acts for the admission of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico. It is similar to former enabling acts enacted by Congress with the exception, perhaps, that as to New Mexico the constitutional convention is empowered to designate the name by which the new State shall enter the Union. And in the case of Oklahoma it is provided that the constitutional convention shall by irrevocable ordinance express the consent of the State of Oklahoma that Congress may attach all or any part of the Indian Territory to the State of Oklahoma. The enabling acts differ from each other chiefly in reference to the public lands appropriated for educational and public purposes.

"There is no rule of law or uniform precedent that determines when a Territory may become a State in the Union, but it has never been questioned that all the continental Territories, with perhaps the exception of Alaska, were at some time to be admitted to the Union upon equality with the other States, and that such a termination of Territorial existence, which has been considered as probationary, was in the nature of a right possessed by the people of the Territories. Political partisanship has played quite a part in the admission of some of the Territories—generally with a result quite opposite to the calculations of the party in power in Congress, which sought to gain advantage by such admission. Fortunately political considerations are eliminated from the discussion of the bill for the admission of the Territories of Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona as States, as both the great parties of the country, in the platforms of the last two national conventions, have declared in favor of such legislation.

"The case, then, may be decided upon the merits, and the time has come when the people of these Territories may, as of right, ask that the merits of their claim for statehood be passed upon by Congress.

"New Mexico has been a Territory for more than half a century; Arizona for more than a generation, and previous to its organization as a Territory was a county of New Mexico. No one of the Territories that have been admitted as States remained so long under Territorial government. Even Oklahoma, the last of the Territories to be organized, has been a Territory for twelve years. If lapse of time is essential to qualify a Territory for statehood, those under consideration have more than served out their probation. Their efforts in the past to attain this end may not be of much weight upon the justice and reasonableness of their claim now, but those efforts do certainly show the earnest and persistent striving of the people of the Territories to become American citizens in reality as well as in name.

"American citizenship is not enjoyed in its fullness in the possession of personal liberty and the protection of law. Among its priceless attributes is the right to choose rulers and representatives and those who make and administer the law. Undoubtedly the deprivation of this right is more keenly felt by the people of the Territories now than ever before, on account of the late acquisitions of the United States beyond the mainland. Hawaii has a full Territorial government; Porto Rico has a governor and other officers appointed by the President, and limited local representation in the legislature of the islands, a representative in Washington, and a United States court. It is proposed to give substantially the same form of government to the Philippine Islands when civil government shall be established there.

"The comparison is not an inviting one when the newcomers to the national fold—the Hawaiian, the Porto Rican, and the Filipino—are placed side by side as to political rights with the pioneers of American civilization in the great West, those who were born under the flag, and have lived under it, fought for it, and under its protection have made American homes, founded American towns and cities, built schoolhouses and churches and public buildings, brought the soil to cultivation, opened the mines, cleared the forests, and made States in fact if not in name. It is often said that the Territories have their own legislatures and make their own laws. But the laws so made can be unmade by Congress. The right to make laws that some one else can unmake is not a high privilege.

"It is no greater than the right possessed by the leading English and French colonies. One of the high attributes of American citizenship is that of equal opportunity under the law with all others; the chance to start fairly in the race for the rewards which enterprise, industry, and thrift may bring. The material advancement of the inhabitants of the Territory depends largely upon the rapid development of the resources of the Territory. The one essential for such development is capital, but it hesitates to enter the Territories and invest in enterprises otherwise promising. Legal certainties and fixed conditions are necessary to attract it.

"With the absolute control of Congress over Territorial legislation, there can never be certainty that rights and privileges conferred may not be taken away. The power of Congress is a constant menace to progress, and there is no way a Territory may escape it. This is not a mere general statement. Abundant and positive testimony was before the committee that ample commitments of capital could be had were the Territories States. Untold riches, abundance of all that makes for human happiness, and prosperous and populous Commonwealths await emancipation from the thraldom of Territorial existence.

"Apart from general considerations, if we look at the actual conditions of the Territories to-day to determine their fitness to become States we shall probably say that it depends upon three propositions:

"(1) Do the people desire statehood?

"(2) Is the population of such number and character as to justify admission?

"(3) Do the Territories possess sufficient taxable wealth to maintain State governments according to the standard of American Commonwealths?

"No time need be spent in answering the first interrogatory. That answer must be overwhelmingly in the affirmative. So general is this desire that it may be said to be unanimous. The representatives of the people in Congress are active and earnest. The public press of the Territories, consisting of hundreds of publications—daily, weekly, and monthly—is without a discordant note.

"Territorial conventions, county conventions, and wherever men in assembly have recorded their opinions, have declared for statehood. And the representatives of the Territories in national conventions of the great political parties have successfully urged that the platforms adopted should make emphatic the right of the Territories to immediate admission to the Union. It is not too much to say that no man can doubt that the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico are practically a unit for admission as States.

"Is the population of the Territories sufficiently large for admission as States? By the last census the population of Oklahoma in 1900 was 398,331; of Arizona, 122,211; of New Mexico, 195,310. The governor of each of the Territories claims in his annual report that the census enumeration does injustice to the Territory, and gives very reasonable grounds for such claim.

"The governor of Oklahoma claims that the population to-day is in excess of 500,000; of Arizona, that the population is 135,000; of New Mexico, that it is 313,191. Probably the true number is between that of the census returns and the estimates of the governors. Whatever the fact may be, Oklahoma has a larger population than any other Territory previous to admission; Arizona and New Mexico larger than many. According to the precedents of the past, their population is ample. But what shall be said of this population in the future? In the last decade the increase of population in Oklahoma was 544.2 per cent; in Arizona, 104.9; in New Mexico, 27.2. Who can estimate the increase in the next decade if they now become States? With a single exception, every Territory after admission has increased with wonderful rapidity in wealth and population.

"What shall be said of the character of this population? In Oklahoma 95 per cent are native Americans, coming from the States. In Arizona, of the 70,000 white population 22,000 are foreign born. The governor asserts that not more than half the foreign-born population is Mexican, the balance being immigrants largely employed in the mines and coming from western and northern Europe. In New Mexico immigration from the Central, Western, and Northern States is rapidly increasing, and more than 7,000 homesteaders have been added to the population during the past year.

"In all the Territories the population is distinctively American and the best type of American, made up of those who seek life's prizes by toil and patience. Of what manner of men this population is made up let their works speak. Cities and towns, with all that modern civilization demands, homes of culture and refinement, schools and higher institutions of learning, public and private charitable institutions, everywhere the free church and free press. These are not the monuments of the Indian nor the Mexican, the idle nor the vicious. The past legislation of the Territories has recorded forever the wisdom the justicee of the people. It can be safely said that they can not be unfavorably compared with the people of any State of the Union.

"What of the taxable wealth of the Territories? Oklahoma is the young giant of the Territories, rich in a soil yielding with nature's most lavish hand all the products of the Temperate Zone. This soil is now almost entirely under cultivation and little of the public lands remain. More fortunate than her sister Territories, Oklahoma has an adequate rainfall. This fair land about equals in size the State of Ohio. If the figures were not at hand to show the valuation of property for taxation, could anyone doubt the ability of the new State to support the best State government? New Mexico and Arizona are an imperial domain. New Mexico is larger than Great Britain, Scotland, and Ireland. Arizona is nearly as large. They differ in topography from the rich prairie lands of Oklahoma, with their mountains, valleys, and high tablelands.

"They lack sufficient rainfall, but the hand of man will supply this lack, and in its place are ever the sunshine and cloudless skies. To compensate for the portions of their lands that are arid they have exhaustless supplies of coal, the one necessity of modern industrial progress, vast forests of virgin timber, great grazing grounds, rich mines of copper and the precious metals. Did not the official figures of the assessed value of property of these Territories answer authoritatively the last interrogatory in the affirmative, the slightest examination of their marvelous resources would place beyond doubt their ability to maintain State governments.

"There is neither justice nor reason in longer denying statehood to the Territories which are here through their representatives petitioning as they have again and again in the past. Always refused or thwarted by the tricks and devices of legislative procedure, the feeling of disappointment is deepening into a sense of wrong inflicted. "Equality of rights is the first of rights." Inseparable from it is the right of equality of opportunity. These boons, the common heritage of all, are now asked by almost a million American citizens. From the islands of the sea, new possessions of the United States, comes the cry for home rule. The American people hasten to announce to the world their purpose to grant it. There is but one kind of home rule possible in the United States. It is that of sovereign States. What we readily grant to the land but lately foreign, and to the alien race, let us not withhold from our own.

"OKLAHOMA.

"The Territory of Oklahoma contains 39,030 square miles, or 24,979,200 acres, an area about equal to the State of Ohio. It lies between the thirty-fourth and thirty-seventh parallels north latitude, and mainly between 96° 30' and 100° west longitude. North and south its location corresponds with that of Tennessee, and east and west with that of central Kansas. The altitude above sea level is from 800 to 3,000 feet. A large portion of the Territory is composed of productive agricultural lands, corresponding in fertility with the rich prairie lands of Kansas, Nebraska, and Iowa.

"The first settlement was made on April 22, 1889, and the census of the following year (1890) showed a population of 61,834. By the census of 1900 the population was 398,331, or more than six times as large as it was ten years before, the increase being 544.2 per cent. The number of persons of voting age was 109,191, and of school age 147,656. Only 3.5 per cent of the total population was foreign born. The following table shows the population by counties for 1900 and 1890:

"Since the census of 1900 the increase of population in all parts of the Territory and the growth of the cities and towns have been phenomenal, and is estimated by the governor of Oklahoma in his report for the year ending June 30, 1901, at not less than 60,000. To this must be added the large influx of population into the Kiowa and Comanche and Wichita reservations, opened to settlement in August, 1901, when 13,000 homesteads were opened for settlement. So there seems to be no doubt but what the present population of Oklahoma is not less than 500,000.

"The increase in the value of property has kept pace with the rapid increase in the population. The following from the governor's report shows the total taxable valuation by counties for the last three years, the character and valuation of the different classes of property taxed, the tax levy for 1901, and the purposes for which the same was made:

"'The total valuation of all property of the Territory as returned for taxation in 1901 was $60,464,696, an increase of $11,126,035 over 1900. Of this amount $4,538,375 was railway property, $17,279,809 farm lands, $8,062,567 town property, $2,552,932 moneys and credits, and $28,631,013 other personal property.

"'Farm lands were returned at an average of $3.45 per acre, cattle at $12.58, horses at $17.14, sheep at $1.30, and hogs at $2.46, which shows that property is returned at a very small part of its real value.

"'The total assessment of each of the counties is given below for three years for comparison.'

"This is an increase of 2.35 mills over last year's rate, the increase being wholly for the erection and payment of buildings for the various educational institutions.

"The total outstanding Territorial indebtedness on June 30, 1901, was $466,220.13. Of this amount $48,000 is in bonds contracted for educational purposes in the early history of the Territory, and the balance is in warrants drawing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. On the same day the amount of cash in the Territorial treasury was $258,590.02. The financial credit of Oklahoma has never been questioned, and all of its obligations have been promptly met.

"The district school system prevails in the Territory. There were 2,096 districts in July, 1901, and 2,343 teachers, with an enumeration of pupils 114,737. It is estimated that the districts formed since that date in the new counties and along the western border have increased the number to nearly 2,500.

"More than $1,000,000 were expended last year for the support of the common schools. High schools are maintained in nearly all the county seat towns, and the graduates from these schools are admitted to the Territorial university and to the universities of the surrounding States.

"Oklahoma has a Territorial university, two normal schools, an agricultural and mechanical college, and a normal university for colored students. All of these institutions are in a prosperous condition. They are liberally supported by the Territory and are attended by upward of 3,000 young men and women.

"The last Territorial legislature appropriated $90,000 for additional buildings for the university, $54,000 for the Agricultural and Mechanical College, and $50,000 for the erection of a third normal school in the southwestern part of the Territory. A university preparatory school is to be established in Kay County, at a cost of $20,000. There are a large number of private and sectarian schools and colleges established in different sections of the Territory.

"The railroad mileage in the Territory is about 1,200. New lines are now being built by several companies, and others are projected and under contract. Before the end of the present year it is probable that more than 400 miles will be added to the present mileage. The railroads already constructed reach 23 out of the 26 county seats in the Territory. During the year ending June 30, 1901, the railroads shipped to markets outside of the Territory 49,011 carloads of live stock and agricultural products, and 238,222 bales of cotton. There are 50 incorporated cities and towns in the Territory, and most of them are connected by railroad and telephone lines, and all the larger towns are supplied with electric light and sewer systems.

"On September 30, 1901, there were 31 national and 113 Territorial banks in the Territory, with $16,494,650 resources and $12,512,016 deposits. Since that time 24 national and 34 Territorial banks have been established, making the total number of banks of both classes now in the Territory 202.

"Twenty-two daily, 168 weekly, 20 monthly, and 4 semimonthly newspapers and periodicals are published in the Territory.

"At the election in 1900, 72,352 votes were cast for Delegate to Congress. This number was in excess of the total vote in each of the following States: Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Vermont, and Wyoming.

"In reviewing the remarkable progress of Oklahoma during the short period of its existence, the governor says in his last report:

"'Had any man dared ten years ago to foretell for Oklahoma but a small portion of what is to-day a reality he would undoubtedly have been classed with Munchausen, or adjudged a fit subject of restraint in some asylum for the insane.

"'And in view of what has been accomplished in these ten years in a new and untried land by a people who had little capital save their strong right arms and active brains, who dares predict for the future, now that the success of all lines of agriculture and business are assured? The lesson of experience has been learned, and not only people, but capital and wealth, are coming and taking hold on every hand to make the future far eclipse the rapid progress of the past.

"'Here to-day is a growing, progressive American community of more than half a million people, successful in all lines of life work, with schools and colleges and universities beyond those of half the States; with a code of laws equal to those of any State; with a taxable wealth sufficient to carry on all of the functions and institutions of self-government without burdening the people.

"'Who, then, can give any good reason why all the rights and privileges of self-government should not be accorded these people?

"'Let him who disputes the claim of Oklahoma to a place in the galaxy of States carefully peruse the pages of this report, as showing the past progress, present conditions, and future possibilities of the Territory, and he can not but be convinced, even against his will, of her right to statehood.

"'With a population much greater than that of any Territory ever admitted to statehood and greater than that of twelve different States of the Union at this time; with a taxable valuation greater than that of any State of the Union at its admission; with a school population almost double the average population of all of the States when granted self-government; with an area almost equal to that of the State of Ohio and greater than that of other States; with a free school within easy distance of every home and a higher college or university education offered without price to all of the youth of the Territory, of whatever race or sex or condition; with well-governed cities and counties and laws enforced in every way; with a people 96 per cent American born and all loyal and patriotic citizens; with an annual production of 25,000,000 bushels of wheat, 60,000,000 bushels of corn, 150,000 bales of cotton, other agricultural products in proportion, and herds that pass the million mark; with a financial record without a stain of default or repudiation; with a financial, commercial, and business growth equaled by no other State or Territory, is not Oklahoma clearly entitled to admission to the sisterhood of States?'

"The July issue of Bradstreet's contained the following résumé of business conditions and progress in Oklahoma:

"'During the past ninety days 1,200 new firms have opened in business and 760 firms have sold out or discontinued, leaving a net gain of 441 new firms in business in the Territory over the number in business three months ago.

"'Twelve small towns and post-offices have been wiped off the slate during the three months, owing to railway extensions and local conditions rendering their location valueless, and in the same ninety days 28 new towns have been started, making 16 more towns and business centers in Oklahoma than were in existence three months ago.

"'In connection with the above information it may not be uninteresting to know that Oklahoma has now 681 towns and cities listed on the mercantile reports.'

"The bill as reported contains all the usual provisions of the enabling acts under which most of the Territories have heretofore been admitted as States.

"In the third section it is provided that the constitutional convention shall by an irrevocable ordinance express the consent of the State of Oklahoma that Congress may at any time, or from time to time, attach all or any part of the Indian Territory to the State of Oklahoma. This leaves Congress free to add the Indian Territory to Oklahoma without obtaining the consent of the State, should the events of the future justify such action.

"Section 7 of the bill provides for granting to the State sections 16 and 36 in every township in the Territory, or indemnity land equivalent thereto, for the support of the common schools. These lands are to be disposed of only at public auction to the highest bidder, preference right to purchase being given to the lessee at time of sale, the proceeds to constitute a public-school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of such schools; but it is provided that the lands may be leased for a period not to exceed five years under such regulations as the legislature may provide.

"In section 8 of the bill, section 13 in every township is granted to the State under the same conditions for the equal use and benefit of the university, the normal schools, and the agricultural and mechanical college.

"Section 33 in every township is granted for charitable and penal institutions, and is to be disposed of as the legislature of the State may provide.

"All of these lands have heretofore been reserved to the Territory under various acts of Congress.

"In addition to these grants, the bill provides that, in lieu of grants of land for the purpose of internal improvements heretofore made new States by acts of Congress, the following grants shall be made to Oklahoma: For the benefit of the Territorial University, 200,000 acres; for the benefit of the agricultural and mechanical college, 250,000; for the benefit of the colored agricultural and normal university, 100,000 acres; for the benefit of normal schools, 250,000, and to be disposed of as the legislature may provide, 650,000 acres, all of said land to be selected by the State with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

"The bill provides that until the next general census the State shall be entitled to two Representatives in the lower House of Congress. The constitutional convention is authorized to provide for the election of officers for a full State government, members of the legislature, and Representatives in Congress, but said State government shall remain in abeyance until the State shall be admitted into the Union.

"In view of the large population, the remarkable development, the abundant financial resources, and of every necessary qualification to exercise the functions of a State government, your committee believe that there should be no hesitancy on the part of Congress to promptly admit Oklahoma into the Union as a State.

"ARIZONA.

"Arizona lies along the northern boundary of Sonora, and is the extreme southwestern political division of the United States. It is 378 miles in length by 339 in width, and contains an area of 113,929 square miles, or 73,000,000 acres, a large part of which is capable of producing every variety of fruit, vegetable, and cereal known to the Temperate zones; mines of gold, silver, copper, iron, and coal inexhaustible in extent; lakes of salt, springs of petroleum, and forests of pine, cedar, spruce, juniper, ash, and oak of as great extent as any State or Territory of the Union. That part of Arizona lying north of the thirty-fourth parallel, embracing only four counties, is greater in area than the six New England States combined. The part lying south of that parallel is destined to become the most famously productive portion of the globe. Within that area the date, olive, fig, grape, lime, lemon, and orange grows, under proper husbandry, in prodigal profusion. Ascending from the lower valleys, every fruit of the Temperate zones is produced in perfection.

"Population.—By the national census of 1900 the population of Arizona is placed in round numbers at 125,000, but the census was confessedly badly taken. The wide range of territory over which the enumerators were compelled to go to take a proper census, and the low price paid for taking the census, prevented the possibility of accuracy. The population of Arizona, from the best obtainable statistics, school census, number of school children, etc., is 175,000. This population has a greater proportion of native-born inhabitants than probably any other subdivision of the United States. Arizona maintains a splendid common-school system, as well as normal schools, and a splendid Territorial university. The inhabitants of the Territory are as well educated, if not better, than in any other Congressional district in the United States. The people are highly progressive and very prosperous.

"The total assessed valuation of the taxable property in the Territory, as ascertained by the Territorial board of equalization in August, 1900, was $39,000,000 in round numbers. The net increase for the year 1901 was over $5,000,000. This low result is had by assessing the property throughout the counties at less than half of its cash salable value, and from it is excluded the great mining properties owned by different individuals and corporations throughout the Territory, and the railroads pay a tax on an estimated value of $7,000 a mile, when they are paying a fair profit on a bonded debt per mile of over $30,000. The copper and gold mines of the Territory are easily worth $100,000,000, the railroads, $20,000,000.

"From the governor's report, 1901, and from other sources, it is learned that Arizona produced in 1900 125,000,000 pounds of fine copper, against 48,000,000 pounds in 1895. Large new producers are developed, and it is safe to say that in the next fiscal year Arizona will produce 150,000,000 pounds. This, at 10 cents a pound, would be $15,000,000. The gold and silver product reached last year about $10,000,000.

"Agriculture.—The agricultural lands of the Territory of Arizona sustained by irrigation are at present confined largely to the waters of the Salt, the Gila, and the Colorado rivers.

"There are 880 miles of irrigating canals now in operation in the Territory, and the lands supplied by these canals can in the near future be easily doubled in area by a proper conservation of the waters of the streams by impounding the flood waters and erecting supply reservoirs for storage purposes.

"Railroads.—Railroad building has been especially active in Arizona during the year. The Arizona and Southeastern has been extended from Bisbee, Ariz., to Nacosari, Mexico. It crosses the international line at the town of Douglas, in Cochise County. A line extends east from Douglas to El Paso, Tex. A line is also projected from a point on the Arizona and Southeastern to the famous mining camp of Tombstone. The Rock Island Railroad is arranging to extend west from El Paso across Arizona to the coast, which will give through that Territory three transcontinental trunk lines.

"The Arizona and New Mexico, from Clifton to Lordsburg, has been widened to a standard gauge during the year and is being extended from Lordsburg to connect with the line from Bisbee to El Paso. Another road has been constructed from Williams, on the Santa Fe, to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, a distance of 65 miles. The Prescott and Eastern Railroad is building a branch from Mayer to Big Bug Creek, and another branch has been surveyed a distance of 25 miles from Mayer into the Bradshaw Mountains, a rich mining district, which branch will undoubtedly be built in the near future. The survey of a line from Phoenix, the capital of Arizona to Benson, to connect with the Southern Pacific Transcontinental line, and with the New Mexico and Arizona, which runs south from Benson through Nogales to Guaymas, on the Gulf of California, has been completed, and the road will soon be built. The 1,558 miles of road now in successful operation within the Territory, with these projected lines, will give to every portion of the Territory a quick outlet to the markets of the world.

"Timber lands.—Arizona has the largest unbroken pine forest in the United States, covering an area of over 10,000 square miles, or 6,400,000 acres. The principal forests are in Coconino County and border on the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, although Gila, Apache, and Yavapai counties have large bodies of timber. In the Mogollon Mountains, in Yavapai, Coconino, Apache, and Gila counties there are large bodies of oak timber suitable for the manufacture of farm machinery, wagons, etc. The ash, black walnut, and oak are found in the lower valleys and ravines. Besides these are the cottonwood, alder, cedar, manzanita, maple, mesquite, wild cherry, and ironwood, the last a tree peculiar to Arizona and Sonora, which has a specific gravity greater than water and, it is said, creates a furnace heat equal to the best coke.

"Public buildings.—The public buildings of the Territory comprise the capitol, situated at Phoenix, recently erected at a cost of $130,000; the university at Tucson, Territorial prison at Yuma, the Asylum for the Insane at Phoenix, and splendid normal-school buildings at Tempe and Flagstaff, and a reform school for young offenders is now in course of erection at Benson, in Cochise County. Besides these, nearly every county has a splendid modern courthouse, jail, and fireproof vaults for public records, and every town and village has public schoolhouses that would do honor to any school district of the older States. Many of these schoolhouses are large, expensive, and architecturally beautiful.

"School lands.—The bill for the admission of Arizona and New Mexico demands four sections in each township for common-school purposes, instead of the two sections heretofore given to other States. New Mexico has received the two sections and is now asking two more. Arizona has received none and is asking for four sections. This, the committee thinks, should be allowed. There is no better purpose to which the public lands could be applied than to the education of the people. The committee estimates that this increased donation will not exceed in value the lands given to other States for similar purposes, as much of the land is of a desert character that can never be reclaimed; much of it in volcanic mountains, which can never be of value to the schools. Arizona has the most liberal school system in the country, and has borne without complaint a heavier tax for school purposes than any other known to your committee, paying at many times and in many places as much as $5 per month for each child in the schools. Attendance is compulsory.

"Customs.—Arizona, by act of Congress, 1892, was made a customs district. The chief port is Nogales, a railroad town on the international line.

"The foregoing is merely a summary of the many facts presented to your committee, from which it is concluded that no valid objection to Arizona's admission to statehood now exists. Many of the greatest States of the Union have been admitted with much less population and half the resources that Arizona possesses. Peace and quiet are everywhere supreme. The law is respected and enforced. Life and property are as safe there as in the capital of the nation. The population of Arizona, by every rule of virtue, education, property, patriotism, and industry, fills to the fullest measure every requirement of citizenship.

"NEW MEXICO.

"The Territory of New Mexico was acquired from the Republic of Mexico under the treaty made between the United States and Mexico at Guadelupe-Hidalgo on the 2d day of February, 1848, and the Gadsden treaty of December 30, 1853. It was organized as a Territory under an act of Congress of September 30, 1850.

"Bills have been reported favorably in the House of Representatives admitting New Mexico to statehood by the Committee on Territories in six or more Congresses, commencing with the Forty-third, and three favorable reports have been made by the Committee on Territories of the Senate in different Congresses.

"New Mexico has an area of 122,580 square miles. It is larger than New York and Pennsylvania combined, or the two States of Iowa and Illinois; three times as large as the State of Ohio, and, if admitted, will be the fourth State in the Union in size, Texas, California, and Montana being the only ones that are larger. Its area in acres is 78,451,200, and of this 23,353,666 acres are included in Spanish, Mexican, and United States railroad land grants and in homesteads and private holdings, leaving still as public domain 55,097,534 acres, a tract considerably larger than the area of the States of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania combined.

"Its population in 1900, according to the census, was 195,310 people. It is claimed, and on what seems to be good authority, that the census report is incorrect and incomplete, and that the actual population at the time the census was taken was nearly 300,000 people, and that the Territory has gained some 30,000 people in population since the time the census was taken. The records show that at the election for Delegate to Congress, which occurred in the fall of the year 1900, that there were registered 59,297 voters, so that according to the usual ratio of votes to population it would appear that the Territory then contained a much larger number of inhabitants than is shown by the census.

"From the Government statistics it may be learned that five of the original States, and twenty-six States that have since been admitted, had a less population than New Mexico now has, even though it should be admitted that the census returns are correct.

"The assessed valuation of the property in the Territory for last year was $38,227,878. There seems to be no question from the hearings and the governor's report that the actual value of the property is at least $150,000,000. The census of 1890 showed an estimate of property values in the Territory of $231,459,897, and all agree that the property interests of the Territory are more valuable now than they were at that time. The evidence presented before this committee, roughly tabulated, shows the present property of the Territory that will be subjected to taxation when it is admitted as a State as follows:

7,000,000 acres of railroad land, with its coal, iron, and timber, at $5	$35,000,000
7,000,000 acres of private patented land grants, with its timber and, in some instances, its minerals, at $5	35,000,000
2,000,000 acres agricultural land, at $10	20,000,000
3,000 miles of railroad, with its franchises, equipment, machinery, shops, etc., at $20,000	60,000,000
Patented mines and plants	25,000,000
7,000,000 sheep and goats, at $2	14,000,000
21,000,000 pounds of wool, at 8 cents	1,680,000
1,700,000 head of cattle, at $20	34,000,000
50,000 head of horses, at $10	500,000
100,000 head of burros, at $2	200,000
City lots and buildings	25,000,000
Stocks of goods	12,500,000
Household furniture of all kinds	4,120,000
Jewelry	2,000,000
Cash, bonds, stocks, mortgages, etc	5,500,000
Produce of mines—coal, iron, gold, silver, copper, lead, etc	5,000,000
Produce of farms—alfalfa, wheat, and other crops	2,500,000
All other kinds of property	1,000,000
Total	283,000,000

"The corporations alone of the Territory are capitalized at $89,735,925.

"The indebtedness of New Mexico at the close of the last fiscal year was $1,205,100, and the cash on hand to meet outstanding obligations was $246,264.96. So that to pay every debt it must expend $958,825.04. Last year, according to the report of the governor of the Territory, all current obligations were met, including interest, and $89,437 was paid on the principal of the bonded debt. If his report can be relied on—and we know of no reason why it should not—the financial condition of the Territory is good and presents an encouraging situation.

"And this is all the more creditable when it is considered that not only has the Territory been self-sustaining, but in addition has built all of the Territorial institutions and instituted its splendid school system without one dollar of aid from Congress, save that which is common to all Territories—the payment of its legislature and judiciary. However, as the revenue laws extend over the Territory the same as anywhere else, and the receipts are all turned into the National Treasury, it perhaps is true that the Territory has never been a burden upon the nation.

"The Territory has an attractive capitol building, which cost $400,000. Its penitentiary is valued at $500,000. Its College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts is estimated at $100,000. Its asylum for the insane cost $80,000. Its school of mines is an investment of $65,000. Its university made an outlay of $60,000. Its normal school represents $60,000 of capital. Its military institute cost over $50,000. Other public institutions which are now in operation have secured appropriations for over $60,000.

"The educational system of the Territory, based upon the public schools, is creditable indeed.

"The Delegate for the Territory has just presented the committee with an advanced report of statistics for the scholastic year 1900-1901, made by the Territorial superintendent of education, which shows a school population of 66,064 children, being an increase over the previous year as given in the governor's report of 13,056, or 24.63 per cent. This fact would seem to corroborate the claim made by the witnesses who appeared before the committee that New Mexico, owing to the enterprises now on foot there, is increasing in population, and has increased, since the census was taken, proportionately faster than any other part of the nation.

"This same report shows that about three-fourths of the school population are enrolled as pupils, and all save a small per cent are in daily attendance; that the number of teachers is 1,046, and the number of schools 800; that the receipts for school purposes for the year ending October 1, 1901, was $839,018.70, and that of this sum $403,700.28 was paid in teachers' wages; that the value of all school property is $2,071,703.25. Besides the public schools and the Territorial institutions, there are over 50 sectarian schools, conducted by all religious denominations, with an enrollment of nearly 4,000 pupils. It is a creditable fact also that in thirty years the per cent of illiteracy has been reduced more than three-fourths.

"Its mining industry is rapidly developing. Last year's product of the mines is estimated at $6,000,000, and consists mainly of gold, silver, copper, and coal. It is claimed, however, that not to exceed one-third of the actual mineral output is taken account of so as to be available for statistical purposes, because the Territory has no reduction works for minerals within its borders, so that its output when shipped in the shape of ores goes to swell the output of other jurisdictions. The Territory mined last year about 1,300,000 tons of bituminous coal.

"In manufacture and industrial enterprise it shows a healthful development. Its banks, of which there are quite a good number, are doing a prosperous business. Its commercial enterprises are a success. There were only three failures reported last year out of 1,662 business concerns. It had a better record in this regard than any other State or Territory in the Union.

"The Territory had more sheep than any other State or Territory April 1, 1900, as shown by the Agricultural Yearbook, and not alone have they been successful in raising sheep, but they have an abundance of horses and cattle, as well as other property, as can be seen by the foregoing tabulated statement and as is fully shown by the governor's report.

"There are published within the limits of the Territory 75 newspapers, 5 or 6 of the daily ones being of such size and make-up as to be a decided credit to the Territory.

"The Territory has, according to the governor's report, about 2,000 miles of railroad, represented by 12 different corporations, and evidence was submitted to the committee showing that several hundred miles of new road have since been completed and that several hundred miles additional are being constructed and in contemplation.

"School lands.—On June 21, 1898, Congress passed an act granting something over 4,000,000 acres of land to the Territory. About 1,000,000 acres of this was for Territorial institutions and the balance was for the benefit of the common schools, and is made up by a grant of two sections, 16 and 36, in each township in the Territory where public land can be had. That act provided, section 7:

"'That this act is intended only as a partial grant of the lands to which said Territory may be entitled upon its admission into the Union as a State, reserving the question as to the total amount of lands to be granted to said Territory until the admission of said Territory as a State shall be determined by Congress.'

"The bill which your committee has reported provides for a grant embracing about the same amount of land as was given by the former act, and designates sections 13 and 33 in each township as school sections. This donation of land, considering that a large quantity of the really good lands are included within land grants, forest reserves, etc., and that the quality of the remaining public lands available is not of the best, is not considered unreasonable, nor will it, in the opinion of your committee, be of any more value to the schools of the future State than would one-fourth or one-third as much land in a place like eastern Kansas or Oklahoma.

"Finally, the committee concludes that the Territory is in every way prepared to maintain itself and do credit to the country at large by its progress.

"It has a patriotic people. When the first call to arms was made in 1898 it furnished a greater number of men, according to population, than any other Commonwealth enjoying the full benefits of American citizenship. There can be no question of its loyalty to country and its devotion to the Republic.

"It has always been a question whether New Mexico should not have been admitted to statehood in 1850, when California was accepted. It is a well-known fact that it then framed a constitution, elected officers thereunder, and sent its Senators and Representatives here at that time, but, after a long struggle, they were returned without the recognition of their right to seats in the legislative body at the Capitol.

"In 1876 a bill for the statehood of New Mexico passed both Houses of Congress, but for some cause was not agreed to in conference between the two Houses. Again, after repeated attempts, it is pushing its claims for statehood. Fifty years has elapsed since its first futile effort. The passage of the bill is urged by both political parties of the Territory; the press is unanimously for it, and the people are demanding it. Why should it not be given?

"If population determines her right, then by nearly every precedent heretofore made her claim is established. If area is to be a factor in its determination, then no question can arise as to her right to statehood. If natural resources and material development are to be the criterion of action, then, upon investigation, she can safely rely upon statehood. If education, integrity, and devotion to American institutions make the bulwark that insures recognition, then Congress, in our judgment, should by legal enactment admit her to the sisterhood of States. If patriotism and a burning desire to enjoy the full benefits of citizenship and to control their own domestic affairs should guide the action of Congress, then the bill enabling her to enjoy these rights should be passed at once."

The Republican national convention of 1900 unanimously passed the following resolution:

"We favor home rule for and the early admission to statehood of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma."

President Roosevelt was a delegate to that convention. There were also present as delegates the following-named members of this body: Mr. A. J. BEVERIDGE, Mr. C. W. FAIRBANKS, Mr. J. R. BURTON, Mr. L. E. MCCOMAS, Mr. H. C. LODGE, Mr. KNUTE NELSON, Mr. J. H. GALLINGER, Mr. T. C. PLATT, Mr. C. M. DEPEW, Mr. J. C. PRITCHARD, Mr. H. C. HANSBROUGH, Mr. P. J. MCCUMBER, Mr. J. B. FORAKER, Mr. BOIES PENROSE, Mr. M. S. QUAY, Mr. THOMAS KEARNS, Mr. F. E. WARREN, and Mr. C. D. CLARK.

Senator GALLINGER was upon the subcommittee which passed upon this resolution and reported it to the committee on resolutions.

Senator FAIRBANKS was the chairman of the committee on resolutions and this resolution was unanimously adopted by that committee and reported to the convention by Senator FAIRBANKS.

The amendment reported by the majority of the Committee on Territories provides for the admission of the Territory of Oklahoma in conjunction with the Indian Territory as a single State, and excludes from statehood the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. In respect to these last-named Territories it is in direct violation of the pledge made by the Republican platform. No resolution was ever adopted in any convention of any party for the assimilation of the Indian Territory in any form to the body of the States. No such proposition was ever seriously considered in either branch of Congress until the improvisation of the majority report now before this Senate.

The Indian Territory should not be included in the State of Oklahoma at present because:

First, under the treaties and agreements between the United States and the Five Tribes a separate political organization was provided for the Indian Territory, and the jurisdiction of the tribal governments extended to 1906. In the agreement with the Choctaws and Chickasaws the following provision was made:

"It is further agreed, in view of the modification of legislative authority and judicial jurisdiction herein provided, and the necessity of the continuance of the tribal governments so modified, in order to carry out the requirements of this agreement, that the same shall continue for the period of eight years from the fourth day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight. This stipulation is made in the belief that the tribal governments so modified will prove so satisfactory that there will be no need or desire for further change till the lands now occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes shall, in the opinion of Congress, be prepared for admission as a state of the Union. But this provision shall not be construed to be in any respect an abdication by Congress of power at any time to make needful rules and regulations respecting said tribes."

Agreements with the Creeks and Cherokees contain the same pledge on the part of the United States, and it would be dishonorable on the part of Congress to violate the treaties and agreements with the Indians.

Second. Because the Indian governments and the entire membership of the Five Tribes are opposed to becoming a part of the State of Oklahoma, and earnestly protest against such action on the part of Congress.

Third. Because the whole body of the land in the Indian Territory is held by the Indian tribes by a fee-simple title, and not a single acre of land outside of a few town lots segregated by the town-site provisions of the Curtis Act is now subject to taxation. All allotments to be made to 85,000 Indians for homesteads are to be exempted from taxation for a period of twenty-five years. No greater injustice could be perpetrated against the people of Oklahoma than to require them to bear the burdens of the Indian Territory with its nontaxable land and anomalous conditions.

Fourth. Because the illiteracy and crime within the limits of the Five Tribes presents a record more deplorable than exists in any other section of the United States. The educational, social, and orderly life of the people of Oklahoma, with their splendid common-school system, colleges, and normal schools, would be seriously impaired by union with the Indian Territory.

By the census of 1900 20 per cent of the entire population of that Territory is reported illiterate. Of the 97,361 persons of voting age, 15.9 per cent are given as illiterate, while of the 109,191 persons of voting age in Oklahoma only 5.9 per cent belong to the illiterate class. Mr. Frank C. Churchill, special agent of the Secretary of the Interior, made an extensive examination of the condition of affairs in the Indian Territory under the direction of the Secretary, as required by act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, and the following is quoted from his report which was transmitted to Congress at the last session. On page 2, House Document No. 522, Mr. Churchill says:

"In all this Territory, the extent and area of which will be given elsewhere in detail, there is not a school maintained by taxation outside of the few incorporated towns which are authorized by the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (Curtis Act), to levy a tax not exceeding 2 per cent for all purposes."

Speaking of Indian education, he says, on page 18—

"But perhaps the most startling fact is that, so far as I can learn, not a dollar of tribal funds has ever been appropriated toward the erection of a day or neighborhood schoolhouse in any of the nations."

Mr. Churchill also gave much attention to illiteracy and crime in the Indian Territory, and reports as follows:

"The Territory is divided into three judicial districts, and such is the demand upon the time of the four Federal judges that much civil business has to be pushed aside from time to time in order that the court may give attention to the enormous number of misdemeanor and felony cases.

"This statement is introduced for the purpose of calling your attention to the fact that a large percentage of the young criminals who appear in courts never saw the inside of a schoolhouse, and, as I believe, would never have landed in jail had they received the ordinary advantages offered in the common schools of the States.

"On this subject I have the testimony of numerous court officers, who declare that many of the persons arrested for the lesser crimes are not naturally vicious, but through ignorance and idleness drift into ways that bring them into trouble, much of which could be averted by popular education in elementary schools.

"On October 2, 1901, I visited the United States jail in the northern judicial district, and of the 264 inmates on that day 65 who could speak English admitted to me that they could neither read nor write, and nearly all of these were young men and women, and the same condition of affairs can be found in the other jails of the Territory.

"But to my mind a worse feature still is that a large part of the jurors and witnesses who try these cases are illiterate, as proven by the books of the United States marshal's office, where these persons receipt for their fees.

"I am informed by one United States commissioner that of 4,000 witnesses examined by him since he assumed his duties in this Territory 23 per cent could not read or write.

"One-sixth of the male population of 21 years and upward are illiterate, and a much greater percentage of the younger men are illiterate, as many of those more advanced in years have come from States where they enjoyed some school privileges; and I have the testimony of several persons whose judgment is worthy of credence that not less than 50 per cent of the criminals are illiterate persons, and criminals are being shipped from this Territory to the several United States prisons and reformatories in carload lots at very frequent intervals."

In this summary of the situation he says:

"I find that upward of 100,000 persons of school age reside in the Indian Territory without free schools."

Fifth. In the various treaties and agreements with the Five Tribes no land or money has been reserved for common schools or for penal and charitable institutions of the future State. No public lands exist in that Territory. The clause in the substitute bill proposing to select for these purposes in Oklahoma lands equal to four sections in each township in the Indian Territory will be practically inoperative, because all the available public lands in Oklahoma of any value have already been reserved by acts of Congress or settled upon by settlers.

Sixth. Without any land subject to taxation, the expense of the courts in the Indian Territory would be unduly oppressive.

"As reported by the Attorney-General of the United States, there were pending in the courts of the Indian Territory on July 1, 1901, 2,548 penal prosecutions. Of this number 1,169 were in the northern district, 570 in the central district, and 992 in the southern district. * * * The expenses of the courts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, were for the northern district, $185,297.22; for the central district, $134,634.30, and for the southern district, $163,455.85, making the total cost of the three courts $483,383.40."

Seventh. Since the Five Tribes occupied the Indian Territory all kinds of spirituous liquors have been excluded by law, and the introduction of liquors into that Territory has been punished as a serious crime. If united with Oklahoma, saloons would be instituted and the Indian tribes would be demoralized and destroyed.

Eighth. Because a large majority of the people of both Territories are unalterably opposed to the union of the two Territories as proposed by the bill. The so-called single-statehood convention recently held in Claremore, in the Indian Territory, was in no sense a representative meeting, was attended by only a few persons, and the resolutions passed and presented to the Senate were inspired by considerations of a local character and to advance individual interests.

Ninth. Oklahoma is ready for statehood. The Indian Territory is unfit in all respects to enter the Union. Oklahoma will make a great and prosperous State, and is capable of supporting 2,000,000 people. Its prosperity of to-day is not due to a fictitious boom, but to the fertility of the soil and to its abundant resources and favorable climatic conditions. Until the unfortunate conditions which exist in the Indian Territory are corrected, and the land becomes subject to taxation and a common-school system is instituted and funds are provided for its support, it would be scarcely less than an outrage to require the people of Oklahoma to pay the taxes to support a State government for the Indian Territory.

Tenth. With the exception of the country owned by the Creeks and Seminoles, which constitutes only a small portion of the Indian Territory, no provision has been made for public roads, and the land for the same will have to be purchased from the Indians at the cost of several million dollars. This condition alone would make a most oppressive rate of taxation for the people of Oklahoma.

Recurring to New Mexico, the faith of the nation was plighted to the people of that Territory at the time of its original occupancy by the troops of the United States, when Kearny, without opposition, occupied Santa Fe, in 1846. He proclaimed that "it was the wish and intention of the United States to provide the people of New Mexico with a free government, with the least possible delay, similar to those in the United States." This proclamation pacified the Territory. The ninth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, of February 21, 1848, provided as follows:

"The Mexicans who, in the Territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution, and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction."

Acting upon these assurances, the people of New Mexico in 1850 held a constitutional convention and adopted a constitution. Afterwards, in the same year, they elected State officers and a legislature, and also elected William S. Messervy as a Representative in Congress. Later the legislature elected R. H. Weightman and F. C. Cunningham as United States Senators. With the Representative-elect they proceeded to this city. They were not admitted to seats, because the compromise act of 1850, which admitted California to statehood, relegated New Mexico to the condition of a Territory. Amongst the many efforts of New Mexico to be admitted as a State since that date one is especially of note.

In the Forty-third Congress a bill for the admission of the Territory was passed in the House of Representatives by a vote of 160 to 54, and afterwards, on the 24th of February, a few days previous to final adjournment, passed the Senate, with a slight amendment, by a vote of 32 to 11. When returned to the House for concurrence in the amendment of the Senate it was found impossible to take it up for concurrence. The bill fell, although favored by three-fourths of each branch of Congress, because of that slight Senate amendment. In an address delivered by Hon. L. Bradford Prince, ex-chief justice and ex-governor of New Mexico, before the trans-Mississippi congress, at Cripple Creek, Colo., July 19, 1901, in reference to the character of the population of New Mexico, he said:

By many the people are looked upon as foreign and not in harmony with American institutions. It is strange that this objection should arise in a land which absorbs half a million of foreigners every year and which manages to assimilate the very worst elements of continental Europe. It should be remembered that New Mexico was acquired in 1846; that all of its inhabitants, except the oldest, were born on American soil, and that its people belonged to a sister Republic with institutions similar to ours, and so needed no new education in free government. For almost half a century they have been electing their legislatures, making their laws, and carrying on their local government under the American system.

The people have shown themselves as loyal as any in the nation. During the rebellion out of her total population of 93,567 she sent 6,561 into the Army. Her volunteers fought at Valverde, Peralta, and on other fields, and at Glorieta, together with their comrades of Colorado, defeated the enemy and turned back the column which was advancing northerly from Texas with the intention of cutting off the Pacific slope from the remainder of the country. The value of that service to the Union cause can scarcely be overestimated. The total number of volunteers from the Territories now composing the six new States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Washington, Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming was 1,170. Colorado sent but 4,903; and Nebraska, Oregon, and Nevada, taken together, did not contribute but 6,047, being 500 less than New Mexico alone.

In the recent war with Spain the people showed equal patriotism, no less than 1,089 volunteers enlisting, including about 500 "Rough Riders," who gained a high reputation at Las Guasimas and on San Juan Hill.

If we look at the foreign element in the population, we will find it smaller in New Mexico than anywhere in the country, except in certain Southern States. A comparison with Territories recently admitted is instructive in this regard. The figures are those of the census of 1890, which are the latest available on this point.

New Mexico contained 11,259 foreign inhabitants out of a total of 153,593, or 7⅓ per cent.

Idaho had 21 per cent; Wyoming, 24; Washington, 25; Montana, 43, and North Dakota, 45.

Even in the older States, New York and Michigan had 23 per cent; Massachusetts, 29; Rhode Island, Wisconsin, and California, 30, and Minnesota, 38.

So that New Mexico looms up as a specially native American community.

But to the uninformed the large number of voters of Spanish descent is looked upon as a grave misfortune. There could not be a greater mistake. It is the possession of that conservative element in connection with the energetic and enterprising American from the East which gives New Mexico her special advantages as a self-governing community over most other Territories. Everyone familiar with the far West knows that the principal danger in new communities arises from the unsettled and irresponsible character of much of the population.

They have energy, general intelligence, vigor, and enterprise, and we recognize them in those respects as good State builders; but at the same time they have some characteristics not so desirable. One is that they are continually "on the move." The number of men through all that region with whom two years is a long residence in any one place is astonishing. The habit of moving is upon them, and they are always looking for some new place to which to migrate. Of course there are many solid, substantial citizens; but this restless, nomadic population constitutes an element that is always active, aggressive, and noisy.

They are eager for office, ready to vote for any amount of bonds and taxation, and to their irresponsible action is principally due the heavy indebtedness and not infrequent bankruptcy of so many Western cities and counties. They do the mischief and are gone before its effects are felt. The chief danger in many a new community comes from this class of men and from the overenthusiasm of others who think that life in the West is a continual boom, and many a State and Territory has suffered from it. But New Mexico runs no such risk. She has a solid, stable, responsible, and conservative element in her native population which counteracts the danger. They are attached to the soil and have no thought of leaving. They are identified with the country and naturally opposed to rash schemes which involve extravagant expense and debt. Mixed with the overzealous American, they form an admirable combination. Another objection which has been urged against us is that of illiteracy.

Some years ago there may have been some force in this argument, but it is fast disappearing. In no respect has New Mexico been making such rapid progress as in public education. Even under the crude system which existed before the public-school law of 1891 the number of children under instruction had increased in a ratio far in advance of the population. The census developed the fact that while the population of the Territory increased 28 per cent during the decade from 1880 to 1890, the number of children enrolled in the schools increased 283 per cent, or ten times as rapidly.

During the last decade the gain has been equally gratifying. The school law of 1891 gave a great impetus to public instruction. Under its beneficent provisions the educational system is improving with great rapidity.

It should be remembered that all this has to be done by direct taxation, as we have had no school fund whatever. Should you deprive all of the States of their school funds a lamentable condition of affairs would result in many of them. If the educational matter is to be considered it should be weighed in the direction of giving us statehood, which will increase our means for public education rather than in depriving us of it.

I submit a table showing the population of these Territories in comparison with a number of the States of the Union at the dates of their admission to statehood:

Arizona, 1900, population	122,931
New Mexico, 1900, population	195,310
Oklahoma, 1900, population	398,331
Montana, admitted November 8, 1889; population, 1890	132,159
North Dakota, admitted November 2, 1889; population, 1890	182,719
South Dakota, admitted November 2, 1889; population, 1890	328,808
Utah, admitted January 4, 1896; population, 1900	276,749
Vermont, admitted March 4, 1791; population, 1790	85,425
Idaho, admitted July 3, 1890; population, 1890	84,385
Wyoming, admitted July 10, 1890; population, 1890	60,705
Ohio, admitted November 29, 1802; population, 1800	45,365
California, admitted September 9, 1850; population, 1850	92,597
Indiana, admitted December 11, 1816; population, 1810	24,520
Illinois, admitted December 3, 1818; population, 1820	55,211
Washington, admitted November 11, 1889; population, 1890	349,390
Minnesota, admitted May 11, 1858; population, 1860	172,023
Nebraska, admitted March 1, 1867; population, 1870	122,993
Oregon, admitted February 14, 1859; population, 1860	52,465
Alabama, admitted December 14, 1819; population, 1820	127,901
Florida, admitted March 3, 1845; population, 1850	87,445
Iowa, admitted December 28, 1846; population, 1850	192,214
Delaware, one of original 13 States; population, 1900	184,735

For the reasons, therefore, that the Republican party in 1900 promised statehood to the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma, while no such pledge was made or promised in the national convention for the Indian Territory, which is not now fit for statehood, and that these Territories compare favorably in number and character of population, as well as in resources and territorial extent, with nearly all of the States admitted to the Union for many years past, and in accordance with the precedents of our history, I recommend that House bill No. 12543 be passed without amendment.

M. S. QUAY.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES ON PRIVATE DIES.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as it is not yet 2 o'clock, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3975) to refund internal-revenue taxes paid by owners of private dies.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. Is there any report accompanying the bill?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; there is a report from the Committee on Claims. I have the report here.

Mr. ALLISON. How were the amounts ascertained?

Mr. LODGE. They were ascertained from the Treasury Department. A similar bill has passed the Senate twice.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMNIBUS STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. As submitted by the Committee on Territories, there is a proposition to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert a substitute. The Chair wishes to know whether it is the desire of the Senate that the language proposed to be stricken out shall be read.

Mr. LODGE. That is the bill, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a House bill, and the committee reports to strike out the text of the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. LODGE. I think the bill ought to be read for amendment in the usual way.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to allow the bill to be laid aside for a few minutes. I expect the chairman of the committee in a few moments with his report. I only ask to have the bill temporarily laid aside for a few minutes in order that he can present his report on the bill. No report has been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside until the chairman of the committee presents his report.

Mr. QUAY. We have been waiting for six months for this report, and I suppose it does not make much difference whether we wait a few moments longer or not. But I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that the formal reading of the bill be proceeded with; that is, merely reading the text of the bill as passed by the House, which has been stricken out by the majority of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. LODGE. And the substitute proposed by the committee.

Mr. QUAY. And the substitute. It is nothing but the formal reading, and we may as well go on with it.

Mr. NELSON. Let the reading of the House bill proceed. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Territories will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment, and read to the end of the second paragraph of section 3.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. At this juncture, in view of the hour, I ask that the reading of the remainder of the amendment be temporarily suspended while the committee presents to the Senate its report in support of the amendment which the committee reports back to the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. I feel it to be my duty to object to that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

Mr. QUAY. I think in a very few moments the Secretary will complete the reading of the substitute, and then we can receive the report.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory as at present described may adopt a constitution and become the State of Oklahoma as hereinafter provided: Provided, That nothing contained in the said constitution shall be construed to limit or impair the rights of person or property pertaining to the Indians of said Territories so long as such rights shall remain unextinguished, or to limit or affect the authority of the Government of the United States to make any law or regulation respecting such Indians, their lands, property, or other rights which it would have been competent to make if this act had never passed.

SEC. 2. That all male persons over the age of 21 years who are citizens of the United States, or who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States as required by law or who are members of any Indian nation or tribe in said Indian Territory and who have resided within the limits of said proposed State for at least six months, are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form a constitutional convention for said proposed State; and all persons qualified to vote for said delegates shall be eligible to serve as delegates; and the delegates to form such convention shall be 120 in number, 60 of whom shall be elected by the people of the Territory of Oklahoma and 60 by the people of Indian Territory. The 60 delegates to be elected by the people of the Territory of Oklahoma shall be apportioned among the several counties of that Territory as near as may be to the population in each of said counties, and such apportionment shall be made by the governor, the chief justice, and the secretary of said Territory; and the delegates to be elected by the people of Indian Territory, as aforesaid, shall be apportioned among the several districts of said Territory in proportion to the population as near as may be by the judges of the United States courts in said Territory; and the governor of said Oklahoma Territory, together with the chief justice or senior judge of the United States courts in Indian Territory, shall by proclamation order an election of the delegates aforesaid in said proposed State at a time designated by them within sixty days after the approval of this act, which proclamation shall be issued at least thirty days prior to the time of holding said election of delegates. That the judges of the United States courts in Indian Territory shall for the purposes of said election establish and define the necessary election precincts and appoint three judges of election for each precinct, which judges may appoint the necessary clerk or clerks; that the said judges of election, so appointed, shall supervise the election in their respective precincts, and canvass and make due return of the vote cast to the judges of the United States courts in said Indian Territory, who shall constitute the ultimate and final canvassing board of said election and whose certificate of election shall be prima facie evidence as to the election of delegates; and the election for delegates in the Territory of Oklahoma shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates of all persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of said Territory regulating election for Delegate to Congress.

SEC. 3. That the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the seat of government of said Oklahoma Territory on the fifth Tuesday after their election, excluding the day of election in case such day shall be Tuesday, and, after organization, shall declare, on behalf of the people of said proposed State, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said convention shall be, and is hereby, authorized to form a constitution and State goverement for said proposed State. The constitution shall be republican in form and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said convention shall provide, by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said State:

First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship: Provided, That polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

Second. That the people inhabiting said proposed State do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title in or to any unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian tribe or nation; and that until the title to any such public land shall have been extinguished by the United States the same shall be and remain subject to the disposal and control of the United States. And said Indian land shall remain under the jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States, as at present; that land belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the limits of said State shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to the residents thereof; that no taxes shall be imposed by the State on lands or property belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use. But nothing herein, or in the ordinances herein provided for, shall preclude the said State from taxing as other lands are taxed any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States, or from any person, a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress or treaty containing a provision exempting the land thus granted from taxation; but such ordinance shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said State so long and to such extent as such act of Congress or treaty may prescribe.

Third. That the debts and liabilities of said Territory of Oklahoma shall be assumed and paid by said State.

Fourth. That provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of a system of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of said State and free from sectarian control; and said schools shall always be conducted in English: Provided, That this act shall not preclude the teaching of other languages in said public schools.

SEC. 4. That in case a constitution and State government shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act the convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution to the people of said proposed State for its ratification or rejection at an election to be held at a time fixed in said ordinance, at which election the qualified voters for said proposed State shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution, and for or against any provisions separately submitted. The returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of the Territory of Oklahoma, who, with the chief justice thereof and the chief justice or senior judge of Indian Territory, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast on that question shall be for the constitution the governor of Oklahoma Territory and the chief justice or senior judge of Indian Territory shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with the statement of the votes cast thereon, and upon separate articles or propositions, and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances. And if the constitution and government of said proposed State are republican in form, and if the provisions in this act have been complied with in the formation thereof, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, within twenty days from the receipt of the certificate of the result of said election and the statement of the votes cast thereon and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances from said commission, to issue his proclamation announcing the result of said election; and thereupon the proposed State of Oklahoma shall be deemed admitted by Congress into the Union, under and by virtue of this act, on an equal footing with the original States from and after the date of said proclamation.

The original of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances, and the election returns, and a copy of the statement of the votes cast at said election shall be forwarded and turned over by the secretary of the Territory of Oklahoma to the State authorities of said State.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for defraying the expenses of said election and convention, and for the payment of the members thereof under the same rules and regulations and at the same rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the Territorial legislature of the Territory of Oklahoma.

SEC. 6. That until the next general census, or until otherwise provided by law, the said State of Oklahoma shall be entitled to four Representatives in the House of Representatives of the United States, And the said Representatives to the Fifty-eighth Congress, together with the governor and other officers provided for in said constitution, may be elected on the same day of the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitution; and until said officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of such constitution, and the said State is admitted into the Union, the Territorial officers of Oklahoma Territory shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices in said Territory.

SEC. 7. That upon the admission of the State into the Union sections Nos. 16 and 36 in every township in Oklahoma Territory, and other lands, equivalent to sections 16 and 36, in every township in Indian Territory, shall be granted from the public domain in Oklahoma Territory, in lieu of sections 16 and 36 in every township in Indian Territory, except sections 16 and 36 in either Territory, or parts thereof, that have been reserved, sold, or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress: Provided, That said indemnity lands, in lieu of sections 16 and 36 of the townships in the Indian Territory, shall be selected in such manner as the legislature may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be granted for the support of the common schools of said proposed State of Oklahoma: Provided further, That sections 16 and 36 embraced in permanent reservations for national purposes shall not at any time be subject to the grant nor to the indemnity provisions of this act; nor shall any lands embraced in Indian, military, or other reservations of any character be subject to the grants or to the indemnity provisions of this act until the reservations shall have been extinguished and such lands be restored to and become a part of the public domain.

SEC. 8. That section 13, reserved by the President of the United States by proclamation issued August 19, 1893, opening to settlement the land known as the Cherokee Outlet, the Tonkawa Indian Reservation, and the Pawnee Indian Reservation, and by any act or acts of Congress since said date, and in all other lands to be opened to settlement in the Territory of Oklahoma or the State to be formed hereunder, is hereby reserved and granted to said State for the equal use and benefit of the University of Oklahoma, the normal schools, and the agricultural and mechanical college of said State, one-third to each, the same to be disposed of as the legislature of said State may prescribe: Provided, That the said lands so reserved or the proceeds of the sale thereof shall be safely kept or invested and held by said State, and the income thereof, interest, rentals, or otherwise, only shall be used exclusively for the benefit of said educational institutions. Such educational institutions shall remain under the exclusive control of said State, and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands herein granted for educational purposes or the income or rentals thereof shall be used for the support of any religious or sectarian school, college, or university.

That section 33, heretofore reserved under said proclamation and acts for charitable and penal institutions and public buildings, shall be apportioned and disposed of as the legislature of the said State may prescribe.

SEC. 9. That said sections 16 and 36, and lands taken in lieu thereof, herein granted for the support of the common schools, shall be disposed of only at public sale, after due appraisal and at not less than $10 per acre, preference right to purchase being given to the lessee at the time of such sale, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of such schools. But said lands may, under such regulations as the legislature may prescribe, be leased for periods not to exceed five years; and such lands shall not be subject to homestead entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only.

SEC. 10. That said sections 13 and 33 aforesaid when sold shall be disposed of at public sale as the legislature of said State may prescribe, but only after due appraisal and at not less than $10 per acre, preference right to purchase being given to the lessee at the time of such sale; but the same may be leased for periods of not more than five years, under such rules and regulations as the legislature shall prescribe, and shall not be subject to homestead entry or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for designated purposes only, and until such time as the legislature shall prescribe the same shall be leased under existing rules.

SEC. 11. That 10 per cent of the proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said State which shall be sold by the United States shall be paid to the said State, to be used as a permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be expended for the support of the common schools within said State.

SEC. 12. That in lieu of the grant of land for purposes of internal improvement made to new States by the eighth section of the act of September 4, 1841, which section is hereby repealed as to said State, and in lieu of any claim or demand of the State of Oklahoma under the act of September 28, 1850, and section 2479 of the Revised Statutes, making a grant of swamp and overflowed lands, which grant it is hereby declared is not extended to the State of Oklahoma, the following grant of land is hereby made to said State for the purposes indicated, namely:

For the benefit of the Oklahoma University, 200,000 acres; for the benefit of the Agricultural and Mechanical College, 250,000 acres; for the benefit of the Colored Agricultural and Normal University, 100,000 acres; for the benefit of normal schools, 250,000 acres, and 650,000 acres to be disposed of as the legislature may provide, said lands to be selected in such manner as the legislature may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 13. That said State, when admitted as aforesaid, shall constitute two judicial districts, to be known as the eastern district of Oklahoma and the western district of Oklahoma. The said Indian Territory shall constitute the eastern district and the said Oklahoma Territory shall constitute the western district. The circuit and district courts for the eastern district shall be held at Muscogee, and the circuit and district courts for the western district shall be held at Oklahoma City for the time being. And the said districts shall, for judicial purposes, until otherwise provided, be attached to the eighth judicial circuit. There shall be appointed for each of said districts one district judge, one United States attorney, and one United States marshal. The judges of said districts shall each receive a yearly salary of $5,000, payable in four equal installments on the 1st days of January, April, July, and October of each year, and shall reside in their districts. There shall be appointed a clerk for each of said districts, who shall keep their offices in the cities where court is held. The regular terms of said courts shall be held at the places designated in this act on the first Monday in January and the first Monday in June in each year, and only one grand jury and one petit jury shall be summoned in each of said circuit and district courts. The circuit and districts courts for each of said districts, and the judges thereof, respectively, shall possess the same powers and jurisdiction and perform the same duties required to be performed by the other circuit and district courts and judges of the United States, and shall be governed by the same laws and regulations. The marshal, district attorney, and clerk of each of the circuit and district courts of said districts, and all other officers and persons performing duties in the administration of justice therein, shall severally possess the powers and perform the duties lawfully required to be performed by similar officers in other districts of the United States.

SEC. 14. That all cases of appeals or writs of error heretofore prosecuted and now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States or the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit upon any record of the supreme courts of said Territories, or that may hereafter lawfully be prosecuted upon any record from either of said courts, may be heard and determined by said Supreme Court of the United States and the said circuit court of appeals. And the mandate of execution or other proceeding shall be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States, or said circuit court of appeals, to the circuit or district courts hereby established within the said State succeeding the Territories from which such record is or may be pending, or to the supreme court of said State, or other State court therein established, as the nature of the case may require.

SEC. 15. That the said circuit and district courts and the courts of said State shall, respectively, be the successors of the courts of Oklahoma and Indian Territories as to all such cases arising within the limits of the Territories described in the first section of this act, with full power to proceed with the same and award mesne or final process therein; and that from all judgments and decrees of the supreme courts of said Territories or the United States courts for said Territories in any case arising within the limits of said State prior to admission, the parties to such judgments or decrees shall have the same right to prosecute appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court of the United States or to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit as they shall have had by law prior to the admission of said State into the Union.

SEC. 16. That in respect to all cases, proceedings, and matters now pending in the supreme or district courts of said Territories at the time of admission as a State and arising within the limits of such State whereof the circuit or district courts by this act established might have had jurisdiction under the laws of the United States had such courts existed at the time of the commencement of such cases, the said circuit and district courts each, respectively, shall be the successors of said supreme and district courts of said Territories, and in respect to all other cases and matters pending in the supreme or district courts of said Territories or in the United States courts for said Territories at the time of the admission of such State arising within the limits of said proposed State, the courts of said State shall, respectively, be the successors of said supreme and district Territorial courts and the United States courts in said Territories. And all the files, records, indictments, and proceedings relating to any such cases shall be transferred to such circuit, district, and State courts, respectively, and the same shall be proceeded with there in a due course of law; but no writ, action, indictment, cause, or proceeding now pending, or that prior to the admission of said State shall be pending, in any Territorial court of said Territories or the United States courts for said Territories shall abate by the admission of said State into the Union; but the same shall be transferred and proceeded with in the proper United States, circuit, district, or State court, as the case may be: Provided, however, That in all civil actions, causes, and proceedings in which the United States is not a party transfer shall not be made to the circuit and district courts of the United States, except it be a case which under existing laws might be transferred from a State court to the courts of the United States, and upon written request of one of the parties to such action or proceeding filed in the proper court as now by law required, and in the absence of such request such cases shall be proceed with in the proper State court.

SEC. 17. That the constitutional convention may by ordinance provide for the election of officers for a full State government, including members of the legislature and four Representatives to Congress, and shall designate, define, and divide the Osage and Kaw Indian reservations and the area now constituting the Indian Territory into counties not to exceed in number 24, and name and designate the county seats thereof, and shall provide rules and regulations and define the manner of conducting the first election for officers in said counties, and shall designate and define four Congressional districts in said State for the election of Representatives. Such State government shall remain in abeyance until the State shall be admitted into the Union and the election for State officers held as provided for in this act. The State legislature, when organized, shall elect two Senators of the United States in the manner now prescribed by the laws of the United States, and the governor and secretary of said State shall certify the election of the Senators and Representatives in the manner required by law. And said Senators and Representatives shall be entitled to be admitted to seats in Congress and to all the rights and privileges of Senators and Representatives of other States in the Congress of the United States; and the officers of the State government formed in pursuance of said constitution as provided by said constitutional convention shall proceed to exercise all the functions of such State officers; and all laws of said Territories in force therein at the time of their admission into the Union shall be in force in said State, except as modified or changed by this act or by the constitution of the State, and the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within said State as elsewhere within the United States.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I ask leave at this time to present an amendment which I will subsequently offer, in order that the same may now be read and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment and asks that it be read. If there be no objection it will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BACON to the bill (H. R. 12543) entitled "An act to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States."

Amend the amendment proposed by the committee on page 46, section 1, line 6, as follows: Strike out "Oklahoma" and insert "Jefferson" in lieu thereof.

Amend further said amendment proposed by the committee wherever the words "State of Oklahoma" occur by striking out "Oklahoma" and inserting "Jefferson" in lieu thereof.

Amend further the amendment proposed by the committee on page 57, in section 13, line 11, by striking out the word "Oklahoma" in each place where the same occurs and inserting the word "Jefferson" in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me, that I may make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I desire to understand distinctly the parliamentary position of the bill before the Senate. As I understand it, the question pending now is upon the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The understanding of the Senator from Pennsylvania is correct.

Mr. QUAY. I will now yield to the Senator from Indiana. I may have something to say after he presents his report.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I send to the desk and ask to have read two telegrams.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana sends to the desk two telegrams which he asks may be read. Without objection, the Secretary will read them.

Mr. LODGE. Before the telegrams are read, in regard to what the Senator from Pennsylvania stated, I suppose it is understood that both the substitute and the original bill are open to amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly, amendments offered to the original bill taking precedence of those offered to the substitute. The Secretary will read the telegrams.

The Secretary read as follows:

ARDMORE, IND. T., December 9, 1902.

Senator BEVERIDGE,
Portland, Washington, D. C.:

At mass meeting held here resolutions sent you from Ada favoring single statehood with Oklahoma were unanimously indorsed.

SIDNEY SUGGS,
President Chamber of Commerce.

MUSKOGEE, IND. T., December 10, 1902.

Senator ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE,
Chairman Committee on Territories,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At an enthusiastic meeting of the citizens of Muskogee, held to-night in rooms of Chamber of Commerce, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted and a copy ordered wired to you:

"Resolved by this nonpartisan meeting of citizens of Muskogee, Ind. T., That we hereby indorse the Oklahoma statehood bill, now pending in the Senate, H. R. 12543, as reported to the Senate by Senator NELSON on December 3, 1902. We believe this bill is the most equitable measure to the people of all classes in the Indian Territory ever offered in Congress. This bill will afford relief badly needed here and give confidence to outsiders contemplating residence in this country, and above all it will speedily give public schools for the education of all children, whether Indians or not."

Hon. A. Grant Evans was elected delegate, and leaves to-morrow to represent our wishes in Washington.

THOMAS P. SMITH, President.
CLARENCE B. DOUGLASS, Secretary.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Territories I present the following report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the report will be received at this time. The Senator from Indiana, on behalf of the Committee on Territories, submits a report, which will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 15794) to amend section 20 of an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved June 10, 1890; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

OMNIBUS STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report may be further interrupted to allow a House bill to be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr .QUAY. I will object unless it is understood that there is to be no discussion which will interrupt the reading of the report. I desire, in accordance with the unanimous-consent understanding of the Senate, to proceed as rapidly as possible with the consideration of the statehood bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think there will be no discussion of the House bill, which I desire to have put on its passage.

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] will agree to have his report printed in the RECORD without further reading, I shall have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will exercise the right to lay before the Senate the communication from the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALDRICH. All right. I ask that the bill may be read.

MERCHANDISE IN BONDED WAREHOUSES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 15794) to amend section 20 of an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved June 10, 1890; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the bill may be read at length.

Mr. QUAY. Now, Mr. President, I object, if the bill is to provoke any discussion.

Mr. ALDRICH. It will not provoke any discussion, I am sure, and it is a bill which must be passed immediately, in the public interest.

Mr. QUAY. If it does provoke any discussion, I will withdraw my consent; that is all. I do not desire to interfere with the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will then be temporarily laid aside. Does the Senator from Rhode Island ask for the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall, after it has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 20 of an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved June 10, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 20. That any merchandise deposited in any public or private bonded warehouse may be withdrawn for consumption within three years from the date of original importation on payment of the duties and charges to which it may be subject by law at the time of such withdrawal: Provided, That the same rate of duty shall be collected thereon as may be imposed by law upon like articles of merchandise imported at the time of the withdrawal: And provided further, That nothing herein shall affect or impair existing provisions of law in regard to the disposal of perishable or explosive articles."

Mr. ALDRICH. I have consulted with the members of the Finance Committee who are present in the city and they all agree that this bill should be passed and passed promptly. I therefore ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has been read. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the the third time, and passed.

THE COFFEE INDUSTRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, relative to the proceedings of the International Congress for the Study of the Production and Consumption of Coffee, which, in pursuance of a resolution adopted by the Second International Conference of American States, was in session at the city of New York from October 1 to October 31, 1902, investigating the causes which are producing the crisis through which that industry is passing.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, December 10, 1902.

OMNIBUS STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will resume the reading of the report.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the report this day submitted from the Committee on Territories.

[Senate Report No. 2206, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred House bill 12543 admitting the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma as States of the Union, reported back said bill on the 3d instant with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting instead a bill for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as a single State.

In support of that action the committee present to the Senate the following reasons:

QUALIFICATIONS FOR STATEHOOD.

The Constitution provides that "new States may be admitted by Congress into this Union." Constitution, Art. IV, sec. 3.

This gives Congress discretionary power as to what qualifications shall be required for the admission of new States.

But it is apparent that some qualification must be required. The admission of a new State involves—

First. The interests of the people of the proposed new State; and Second. The interests of the remainder of the Republic.

The second consideration is of at least equal weight with the first, since the new State has equal voting power in the upper branch of Congress with all the other States, and therefore the welfare of the Nation is permanently affected. If the admission of a new State is considered the formation of a contract between the Nation and the new State, the least that can be said is that the Nation is as much entitled to consideration as the new State. If the admission of a new State means its absorption into the body and being of the active and political Nation, the consideration becomes all the stronger. Therefore the qualifications of the community asking for statehood are of vital concern. These qualifications involve—

First. The number of people asking for admission;

Second. The condition of those people as to educational, moral, and other elements of citizenship;

Third. The extent of territory occupied by them;

Fourth. The extent to which they have developed the resources of that territory; and

Finally. The extent and character of all natural resources, both developed and undeveloped.

The people must be sufficient in number; they must be on an equality with the rest of the people of the Nation in all that constitutes effective citizenship; they must have developed the resources of the land they occupy, and have further resources susceptible of like development to bring their proposed new State up to the average of the rest of the nation.

These requirements grow out of the nature of our form of Government.

Upon all of these qualifications Congress is, of course, the judge. If Congress saw fit it might admit 50,000 people covering 500,000 square miles of territory as a State. Conversely, Congress might reject the application of 5,000,000 people within a limited area. There is no limit on its constitutional power.

RULE AS TO POPULATION.

But while the preparedness of a community asking statehood is left to the good sense of Congress, we are not without an established rule. When the Constitution was adopted no such development as we have experienced was contemplated, but still the Republic was then in possession of the Northwest Territory and the formation of States out of that Territory was contemplated.

The last work performed by the Continental Congress relates to this, and, as Daniel Webster declared, is second in the importance, value, and wisdom of its provisions only to the Constitution itself. This was the famous ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory.

This ordinance provides for the future division of said Territory into not more than five nor less than three States, and it fixed the boundaries of three of them, namely, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. The fifth article of that ordinance provides that—

"Whenever any of said States shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein such State shall be admitted, by its Delegates, into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government."

It is thus seen that the fathers, even in the eighteenth century, provided:

First. For very large States as to area and resources (for it was then well known that the Northwest Territory was rich in agricultural resources and the natural home of a mighty population); and Second. That each of these States must have a population which, in comparison with the population of the rest of the Republic at that time, was very heavy indeed.

This rule was referred to by President Washington in his message transmitting to Congress the constitution of Tennessee, and President Washington added that:

"As proofs of the several requisites to entitle all the Territories south of the Ohio River to be admitted as a State into the Union, Governor Blount has transmitted a return of the enumeration of its inhabitants," etc.

"SIXTY-THOUSAND RULE" BASIS FOR SLIDING SCALE.

This number, however, was not intended to be a permanent requisite, but a standard referring to the population of the rest of the nation at the time. By comparing 60,000 (the number of people required for statehood in 1787) with the population of the nation at that time we find the ratio which statesmen of that day deemed essential as between communities applying for statehood and the nation itself. At that time the population of the United States was less than 4,000,000. If 60,000 were required as the first requisite for statehood when the population of the nation was less than 4,000,000, the same rule would require a population at the present time of over 1,153,000; and every reason supporting the rule of 60,000 established by the fathers' ordinance of 1787 requires as many more than 60,000 now as the population of the nation itself at present is larger than it was one hundred and twenty years ago.

In fixing the boundaries of three of the States of the Northwest Territory the authors of that ordinance also established a precedent in favor—

First, of large areas in any future State and against small areas; and

Second, in favor of natural and scientific boundaries and against accidental and eccentric boundaries.

Could the vast development west of the Mississippi River have been foreseen at that time, it is plain from the precedent established in fixing the boundaries of the States of the Northwest Territory that the fathers would have indicated yet much more comprehensive boundaries, for if States as large as Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio were the least which the nation required of any communities coming into it at a time when the nation was confined to the thirteen original States, it is plain that still larger areas would be required when the nation has grown as it has grown during the successive periods of its history.

"UNIT OF REPRESENTATION" RULE.

This rule was observed down to the admission of Michigan and was referred to by President Jackson in his message of December 9, 1835. That the rule of 60,000 was not considered permanent, because too small, is shown by the fact that in the matter of the admission of Kansas the new rule was introduced that the population of the new State shall at least equal the unit of representation in the House of Representatives. This rule has not been observed and was neither scientific nor based upon the principle of a popular government for the nation.

For, despite the fact that the different sizes of the 13 colonies and the insistence by ambitious men from the smaller States for an equal representation in the Senate with the larger ones compelled the anomalous compromise by which small States secured as large a vote in the Senate as the large ones, nevertheless the general theory, of course, was that there should be a government by population and not by area. It was intended that the Senate should never be a large body, but yet that, remaining a small body, it should still stand for a quantity of people and not a quantity of land. For it was universally agreed that the Senate should always remain as small as possible numerically, the reasons for its existence and the elements of its usefulness in our scheme of government demanding this.

ARIZONA FAILS ON EITHER RULE; NEW MEXICO JUST WITHIN THE LATTER RULE AND NO MORE.

But measured even by the rule adopted in the case of Kansas, unscientific as it is and negativing as it does the very purpose and reasons of the organization of the Senate, Arizona is not (and New Mexico is only just within the rule) at present entitled to admission into the Union. For the unit of representation according to the census of 1900 is 194,182; and Arizona by the census of 1900 has 122,931, and New Mexico 195,310.

Measured by the statesmanlike rule laid down in the ordinance of 1787 as applied to existing conditions, both Arizona and New Mexico fall far short of the required population, while Oklahoma and the Indian Territory about measure up to it, but no more, for the population of Arizona by the census of 1900 is 122,931, that of New Mexico is 195,310, while that of Oklahoma is 398,331, and the Indian Territory 392,060, or together 790,391, and it requires only a personal inspection of those two Territories to demonstrate that since the census of 1900 was taken tens of thousands of immigrants have arrived there and established homes.

NEW RULE SUGGESTED.

But if neither of the above guides be observed in forming our judgment as to the number of people required to make a new State and the whole subject be submitted anew to the good sense of Congress, the committee are quite as emphatic in their opinion that neither New Mexico nor Arizona are at the present moment entitled to statehood. For the Republic is now a nation of nearly 80,000,000 people; every policy which affects the national well-being of these 80,000,000 is within the power of each State equally with every other State, because every measure must pass the Senate as well as the House before becoming a law; and matters of vital national concern are determined by the Senate alone, in conjunction with the Executive Department. While, therefore, it is not contended that any new State should be as large in population as any existing State, it is contended that it should be large enough to bear some fair proportion to the population of the rest of the Republic.

Indeed, it would have been well and would now be well if the rule could be adopted that any new State should have a population equal to the average population of the rest of the States. This rule would require a population for any proposed new State, at the present time, of 1,650,000, and, as has been stated, New Mexico's population is 195,310 and that of Arizona is 122,931.

OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.

But not only are numbers of people requisite. The advancement of that people, their state of life, their familiarity and sympathy with our institutions, their educational condition, and all of the elements that go to make up good citizenship are to be equally considered. So, as we have seen, are the resources of their Territory and the present development of those resources.

What, then, of these qualifications as applied to the Territories under consideration? Acting under the power given by the resolution adopted by the Senate at the close of the last session, a subcommittee of the Committee on Territories visited all of them and diligently examined on the ground these various matters.

NEW MEXICO.

CENSUS SUBSTANTIALLY ACCURATE.

As to New Mexico, the committee believes that the census of 1900 is substantially accurate. In view of the attempt to impeach the census by those favoring the admission of New Mexico, particular attention was given to this subject. (Testimony of witnesses Pablo Ulibarri, Las Vegas; Barbara Perea y Resarri, Santa Fe; Joseph P. Conklin, Santa Fe.)

It may be that a few thousand people have entered the Territory since the census was taken, but not in sufficient numbers to affect appreciably the total given.

ANALYSIS OF NEW MEXICAN POPULATION.

Of these the great majority are native New Mexicans of Spanish (and mixed Spanish and Indian) descent, and of these practically all speak Spanish in the affairs of daily life and the majority speak nothing but Spanish. (Testimony of census enumerators, justices of the peace, and census for 1900.)

COURTS CONDUCTED THROUGH INTERPRETERS.

All courts are conducted through the medium of an interpreter, and it is impossible to conduct the machinery of justice without this official. (Testimony of Judge W. J. Mills, Nepomuceno Segura, William E. Gortner, Judge McFie, Judge Baker, Judge McMillan, Judge Parker, Jose D. Sena.)

The interpreter interprets the testimony of witnesses to the jury, the argument of counsel to the jury, and the charge of the court to the jury. (Testimony of witnesses above.)

Occasionally the interpreter must be sent by the judge to the jury room in order to enable the jury to reach a verdict, since it sometimes happens that some of the members of the jury are English speaking, some Spanish speaking, and no member of the jury can speak both languages. (Testimony of Nepomuceno Segura, Judge McFie, Judge Parker, Judge McMillan, Jose D. Sena, Nestor Montoyo.)

In the majority of cases it is true that some member of the jury is able to speak both languages and can then act as interpreter for the others. (Testimony of witnesses above.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, SPANISH.

Coming to the "courts of the people"—justices of the peace—practically all of them speak Spanish and the proceedings of their courts are conducted in Spanish. The dockets of nearly all justices of the peace are kept almost exclusively in Spanish. The statutes of the Territory in the offices of practically all justices of the peace are printed in Spanish. (Testimony of Jesus Maria Tefoya, Felipe Baca y Garcia, Francisco Anaya, Chas. M. Conklin, Jose Maria Garcia, Juvencio Quintana, Leonardo Duran, Seferino Crollott, and Manuel Lopez.)

Practically all subpœnas, summonses, and other processes from justice of the peace courts are in Spanish. The same is true in criminal cases in the Federal and Territorial courts. (Testimony of above.)

POLITICAL CONVENTIONS AND SPEECHES BY INTERPRETER.

In political campaigns almost all political speeches are made either in Spanish or in English through an interpreter, and interpreters are used in practically all (it may even be said in all) political conventions. (Testimony of C. M. Foraker, H. S. Wooster, Felipe Baca y Garcia.)

This is true even in the "American" town of Albuquerque. (Testimony of C. M. Foraker.)

An interpreter was used in the last Republican Territorial convention, which nominated the present Delegate to Congress, and nominating speeches were made through that medium. (Testimony of Jose D. Sena.)

An interpreter is used in the legislature, and both council (senate) and house have official interpreters. (Testimony of Jose D. Sena.)

SPANISH AND ENGLISH TAUGHT IN SCHOOLS.

Until recently (historically speaking) no English was taught in the common schools. At present both Spanish and English are taught in most of the schools. (Testimony of Miss Francesca Zaña, Enrique Armijo, J. Francisco Chaves, Rafael Gallegos.)

Spanish is taught through the second reader and no further, because a person who has learned Spanish sufficiently to go through Manella's Second Spanish Reader can speak and write that language fluently, and no further instruction for practical purposes is necessary. (Testimony of Enrique Armijo.)

In some schools, as in those at Santa Fe, no Spanish is taught. (Testimony of J. Francisco Chaves.)

IN SOME SCHOOLS SPANISH IS TAUGHT EXCLUSIVELY.

In some schools Spanish is taught exclusively and history, arithmetic, and geography are translated from American text into Spanish. (Testimony of J. Francisco Chaves, superintendent public instruction for New Mexico.)

In some high schools, such as the high school at East Las Vegas, the "American" town, as distinguished from Las Vegas proper, the so-called "Mexican" town, Spanish is taught only in the last two years of the course, and the reason it is taught in these higher grades is because the graduates must understand that language for the active affairs of daily life. (Testimony of Maggie J. Bucher.)

CHILDREN TEND TO RELAPSE INTO SPANISH.

Of all schools (save probably the high schools at Albuquerque and East Las Vegas and the purely "American" towns of Carlsbad, Roswell, and Rowan), the children at play during the recess or going home from school speak Spanish instead of English. (Personal observation of subcommittee and testimony of Francesca Zana, Georgia Murray, Enrique Armijo.)

When the children finish their school career, or leave school for good, their tendency is to relapse into the Spanish, that being the language in their homes and in the affairs of their daily life. (Testimony of H. S. Wooster and Georgia Murray.)

Some witnesses testified to the contrary; but the observations of the committee do not confirm this.

In the elections it is necessary to print ballots in Spanish as well as in English. (Testimony of H. S. Wooster and Pablo Ulibarri.)

There are towns (some even when surrounded by heavily predominating American conditions and influences, such as at Las Vegas) where the signs at grocery stores, meat markets, and all the mercantile establishments are printed exclusively in Spanish. (Testimony of Enrique E. Salasar.)

The above are the conditions even in the larger towns; and this is intensified, of course, in the little country settlements, where the people are usually bunched together, their occupation being principally that of herding sheep and goats and with little or practically no communication with the outer world. (Testimony of H. S. Wooster and Rafael Gallegos.)

A portion of the population, even including justices of the peace, have little understanding of our institutions. (Testimony of Felipe Baca y Garcia and Leonardo Duran.)

ILLITERACY.

The remainder of the 195,310 people in New Mexico are called in that Territory "Americans," as contradistinguished from the class above spoken of, who are there termed "Mexicans." But the "Americans" are made up from every other nationality except Mexicans. Germans, Italians, French, and all other nationalities are called "Americans," and yet of the entire population of New Mexico 33.2 per cent are illiterates—that is, that portion can neither read nor write Spanish, English, or any other language. (Census of 1900.)

If the test of illiteracy were confined to the English language only, the committee is of the opinion that the percentage of illiterates would be much more than doubled.

JURYMEN SOMETIMES SIGN BY THEIR MARK.

Even members of grand and petit juries sometimes sign their names by their marks; and the testimony shows instances where 19 out of 21 jurors signed by their mark, and another instance of 21 out of 24 who signed by their mark. (Testimony of C. M. Foraker.)

What the illiteracy of the people of New Mexico (also Arizona) means is shown by comparisons with Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, as set out in the following statement:

PERCENTAGE OF ILLITERATES.

Percentage of illiterates of the aggregate population, 1900: Arizona, 29 per cent of a total population of 123,931; Indian Territory, 19 per cent of a total population of 392,060; New Mexico, 33.2 per cent of a total population of 195,310; Oklahoma, 5.5 per cent of a total population of 398,331.

From all the foregoing the Senate will understand why the subcommittee was compelled to use an official interpreter, whose services were never employed when it was at all possible fairly to understand the witness in English. A great many of the witnesses taken without the interpreter spoke very broken English, and were occasionally helped out by the interpreter. Many could give testimony only through the interpreter. It was also frequently impossible to subpœna witnesses except by the aid of the committee's official interpreter.

A FAIR START EDUCATIONALLY.

As to educational progress, and especially advance in the speaking of English, the committee, after having made every possible allowance, are of the opinion that the very most that can be said is that New Mexico is beginning to get a fair start and no more. In saying this the committee have in mind the excellent schools, and particularly the high schools, of East Las Vegas and Albuquerque, for which too much can not be said, and also the devoted work of Superintendent Wood, of Santa Fe, and the corps of teachers under him.

UNIVERSITY OF NEW MEXICO.

The Territory has at Albuquerque university buildings worthy of high praise. The university is presided over by a competent president, under whom is a corps of efficient instructors. The university is attended by 110 students, of whom a large percentage are from the town of Albuquerque itself. This institution is, of course, growing in power and influence and in time will make itself felt for the good of the Southwest.

THE FUTURE OF THE "MEXICAN" ELEMENT.

Nothing is said against the patriotism or the native intelligence of the great mass of people who constitute the so-called "Mexican" population of New Mexico. They have many excellent qualities. The "Mexican" class, as a body, have also many characteristics not familiar to the mass of the American people, and, to the hypercritical, not perhaps admirable, though this is a question of point of view. There are of course among them men and women of high education, culture, and all the best qualities of good citizenship.

On the whole, the committee feel that in the course of time, when education, now only practically beginning, shall have accomplished its work; when the mass of the people or even a majority of them shall in the usages and employment of their daily life have become identical in language and customs with the great body of the American people: when the immigration of English-speaking people who have been citizens of other States does its modifying work with the "Mexican" element—when all these things have come to pass, the committee hopes and believes that this mass of people, unlike us in race, language, and social customs, will finally come to form a creditable portion of American citizenship. And when that time arrives no one, least of all the members of the committee who have studied the situation on the ground, will object to statehood for this people so far as this particular consideration is concerned.

THE "AMERICAN" ELEMENT.

As to the remaining, or "Americans," some of them are not as good citizens as the Mexican element. (Testimony of Judge Mills.) Such are the "riffraff," to use the expression of United States Judge Mills (testimony, p. 1), who first follow the introduction of railroads, and certain other elements always seen on any country's extending frontier, but these are, of course, disappearing. The majority of "Americans," however, are good material for citizenship, and of a large number of them absolutely too much can not be said.

In the "American" town of East Las Vegas, and in the "American" town of Albuquerque, there are men and women of culture, refinement, ability, energy, and all the best qualities of human character, unexcelled by the most favored section, either in country or city, of this or any other land. This is true of the "American" element of Sante Fe, of the little town of Carlsbad (population from 800 to 1,000), of the flourishing town of Roswell (population, 2,500), both on the Pecos River, and, as the committee are informed, of Alamogordo and Deming, and perhaps one or two other points.

DWELLINGS OF THE PEOPLE.

Aside from these towns, practically all development is Mexican. For example, the Mexican population universally live in adobe or mud houses, just as they did a hundred years ago. Even in the capital city of Santa Fe practically all the residences and most of the schools are in these earth structures. These houses are built of mud (sometimes plastered), of bricks of sod (this is not the true adobe house, however). These to-day resemble to a striking extent the common and usual homes of the Chinese people, both in city and country.

It is said that these adobe habitations are surprisingly comfortable and well adapted to the country; but it is a striking fact that wherever Americans have taken up their abode they seldom are content with that condition, and therefore in the American towns and "American" section of any towns homes and business buildings of wood, brick, and stone quite as beautiful and commodious as that of any portion of the United States are always to be found.

Such, briefly, is the extent and condition of the population of New Mexico.

What now of their occupations, natural resources, and the developments thereof?

There are practically only three occupations for the people as a whole—agriculture, stock raising, and mining.

INDUSTRIES, AGRICULTURE.

Agriculture is conducted exclusively by the aid of irrigation (the so-called dry farming is so inconsiderable as not to be an appreciable quantity). The irrigation, of course, can only be along the water courses. Of these there are three—the San Juan on the northwestern side of the Territory, where a little irrigation has developed, the Rio Grande on the western side of the Territory, and the Pecos on the eastern side of the Territory.

IRRIGATION ON RIO GRANDE.

The irrigation on the Rio Grande is precarious because of the small quantity of water in that stream, for from one to six months each year it is practically dry from Albuquerque to below El Paso, Tex. (Testimony of Professor Newell and others.)

At El Paso, Tex., the committee found people going across the dry bed of the stream by paths which had already become dusty. At Las Cruces the irrigation ditches observed by the committee had no water in them. Until the storage system is established, irrigation along the Rio Grande is not only uncertain but very limited. (Testimony of Professor Newell and others.)

In recognition of this, the Interior Department, through its representative at the Agricultural College at Las Cruces, has begun the experiment of sinking wells. Whether this experiment will prove successful is problematical. (Testimony of John J. Vernon.)

IRRIGATION ON THE PECOS.

At Carlsbad, which is a thoroughly "American" town, there are 12,500 acres under irrigation. The water is derived from the Pecos by means of dams. At Roswell, also a thoroughly "American" town, some distance north of Carlsbad, there is a considerably larger portion under successful irrigation. The water for this is derived from the Pecos River and from wells, several of which are in successful operation at that place. (Testimony of Professor Newell; also Francis Gallitin Tracy.)

The permanent success of irrigation from the waters of the Pecos is affected by the gypsum with which the water is charged. This is, for the first year or two, a fertilizer, but thereafter cakes the soil and is harmful to agriculture. The soil of the ranches is frequently injured—"ruined," some say—by it. (Testimony of Professor Newell.)

FURTHER IRRIGATION A PROBLEM OF THE FUTURE.

The above is the extent of agriculture by irrigation in New Mexico as at present developed. It is hoped that a system for the impounding of waters, not only of the flood waters in streams, but also of the water from rains, will enable the people to more largely indulge in successful agriculture. This, however, is declared by scientists who have given the subject special and practical study to be a question of a generation, or even more. (Testimony of Professor Newell.)

Agriculture by irrigation is very largely an adjunct to stock raising, although fruits and the cereals are also successfully grown by means of it

STOCK RAISING—ITS LIMIT.

The second industry and first in point of importance is herding and stock raising. For cattle this is successful for a space of 5 miles on either side of a stream, or on what are called "water holes," in the foothills. (Testimony of Martinez Amador and others.)

The capacity of the Territory for stock raising can therefore be determined with comparative accuracy. For horses a still wider range is possible, while sheep thrive where neither horses nor cattle can prosper. But when sheep are introduced into a region it seriously interferes with the grazing of cattle, for the reason that the sheep closely crop all edible herbage, leaving nothing for the cattle to subsist upon.

The extent and value of the agriculture and live stock of New Mexico at present are shown by the following table, prepared by the Statistician of the Agricultural Department:

Acreage, production, and value of farm products in 1901, and number and value of live stock in 1900, Twelfth Census.

	Acres.	Quantity.	Value.

RAINFALL.

The want of water in the streams and the desert-like dryness of the territory away from the streams is caused by the aridity of this region. The average rainfall in the region of Carlsbad is 13.16 inches in the course of an entire year; in the region of Mesilla Park, 9.24 inches; in the region of Roswell, 15.92 inches; in the region of Socorro, 9.15 inches; in the region of Santa Fe, 14.25 inches. The average annual rainfall for the Territory is 10 to 15 inches. What this shortage of water and rainfall means appears from a few comparisons here given:

Average annual precipitation for thirty-two years—1870-1901.

	Inches.
Arizona	10 to 15
New Mexico	10 to 15
Oklahoma	25 to 30
Indian Territory	35 to 40
Indiana	40

New York	35 to 40
Illinois	35 to 40
Pennsylvania	40
Iowa	30 to 35

CHARACTER AND RESULTS OF ARID-REGION RAINFALL.

Even this does not indicate the true situation; for, whereas the rains in non-arid regions are usually gentle and continuous, so that the ground may take up the rain as it falls, in the arid regions it is heavy and precipitous, running off of the ground or being evaporated almost immediately and leaving the soil within a few hours as dry as before the shower. (Report Governor of New Mexico.)

The ineffectiveness of such insufficient rainfall as occurs in New Mexico and Arizona is further set out in the following letter from F. H. Newell, hydrographer of the United States Geological Survey:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
"Washington, D. C., December 6, 1902.

"Hon. ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE.

"DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry regarding the rainfall in arid and semi-arid regions and the effect of this in the formation of rivers, I should first explain that the data concerning the amount and time of the occurrence of rain are collected by the Weather Bureau and are obtained from their publications. The study of these figures in connection with those of the flow of various streams has brought out several facts of interest, particularly that the quantity of water available for storage and for irrigation is not directly dependent upon the quantity of rain which falls during the year. The slope of the ground and the rate at which the rain falls each have often a very large influence on the behavior of the rivers.

"To illustrate this two extreme cases may be taken. In the first a rain falling upon a nearly level surface, such as the plains of western Kansas or the 'Panhandle' of Texas, may be entirely soaked into the ground or stand in pools on the surface and be completely evaporated; thus, over hundreds of square miles there are no water courses, the prairie sod being too tough to permit young streams to be formed. Here is a region of moderate rainfall from which there is no run-off. On the other extreme, take a high granite peak. The rains falling upon this at once flow down the smooth sides and a very trifling amount is evaporated or absorbed by the rocks, practically all of the rainfall being available for water storage.

"As an example of the way in which rain falls, on one extreme we can take the gentle, long-continued shower in which several inches of rain falls, but descends at about the rate at which the earth can receive it, and thus upon even the rolling hills all of the water goes into the ground to be subsequently evaporated or transmitted to springs at a lower altitude.

"The same amount of rain falling on the same region in a sudden cloudburst or heavy downpour does not have time to soak into the ground, and hence a flood occurs from a rainfall of the same quantity as that above noted, and which does not appreciably swell the streams.

"It is characteristic of arid regions that the rain which falls is usually torrential. For months or even years there may be scarcely appreciable precipitation and then comes a sharp shower of two or three inches of rain. The dry soil is deluged so quickly that the surface is packed and little of the rain sinks in, the greater part instantly flowing off into stream channels and coming down as a destructive flood, valueless for irrigation and dangerous to curb in the ordinary storage reservoir.

"A statement of annual rainfall does not bring out this fact of the erratic distribution of rain in the arid regions, of which, say, 10 inches may fall during the year; the greater part may be in one or two showers at short intervals and cause temporary floods. This renders it essential to guard carefully against conclusions drawn from a single statement of the total annual rainfall in any locality, particularly if this has to do with the probable amount of water available for use. There are regions which have the same annual rainfall, one of which has no streams, and the ground is covered with valuable nutritious grasses; the other is a nearly barren desert, intersected with stream channels, the size of whose boulders indicate that at long intervals powerful floods plow their way through the desolate waste.

"Very truly, yours,

"F. H. NEWELL, Hydrographer."

MINING.

The third occupation is mining. This is not yet largely developed, though a number of mines are under more or less active operation. Great "claims" are made, however, as to vast deposits of coal, iron, copper, gold and other ore, and these "claims" are supported by more or less "indications." The existence of ore deposits in the quantities claimed is not yet an established fact. The committee hopes and is inclined to believe that these "claims" will probably be at least partly verified at some future time. But no railroads have been run into the region where it is asserted these vast deposits exist, and this fact affords a striking contrast to the condition in Indian Territory, where the absence of even a territorial form of government has not prevented railroads from penetrating to the mining regions which are already in extensive operation.

MINING OUTPUT.

The mining output of the Territory, as given by the census, is as follows:

Products.	1899.	1900.	1901.
Portland cement.....barrels..	1,500	.....	.....
Clay products	.....	.....	.....
Coal.....short tons..	1,050,714	1,299,299	1,086,546

Gold.....fine ounces..	28,256	40,292	33,302
Silver.....do....	503,300	434,300	563,400

The comparative value of the above table is illustrated when it is borne in mind that at the same time Colorado, Montana, and California produced the following:

GOLD, FINE OUNCES.

State.	1899.	1900.	1901.
California	735,194	765,109	817,121
Colorado	1,256,920	1,394,622	1,339,673
Montana	230,270	227,266	229,495

California	824,300	941,400	925,600
Colorado	22,262,900	20,483,900	18,437,800
Montana	16,096,000	14,195,400	13,131,700

Such, then, is New Mexico as to the people, their character, condition, and educational progress, and such is the Territory in its resources and the occupation of its inhabitants.

ARIZONA.

Arizona has a population of 122,931 (census 1900). Of these the considerable majority are Americans, as distinguished from the native or "Mexican" population, although more than 25,000 (26,863) are "Mexicans." Schools are conducted in English with few or practically no exceptions, and while interpreters are used in the courts, it is to a limited extent compared with New Mexico. (Testimony of Judge —— at Tucson.)

CENSUS SUBSTANTIALLY CORRECT.

The census has been earnestly attacked by those asking for the immediate admission of Arizona upon two grounds—first, that the enumerators did not count the prospectors in the mountains, and, second, that it is so exceedingly hot in summer in the region of Phoenix and Tucson that those who can afford it leave during the heated season for the California seashore or other summer resorts.

Careful inquiry convinces the committee that such omissions were not serious and that the census is substantially correct. As to the "prospectors," they, of course, are not a permanent class of citizens, and it would be impossible to consider them even if they could be found. As to those who leave Phoenix and Tucson and other portions of the Territory during the excessive heat of summer, the committee was unable to find an estimate by enumerators of more than 104 such omissions. Conceding that a thousand were sufficiently well-to-do to enjoy this luxury, the results of the census would not be substantially disturbed. Even if 5,000 went away during the summer and were omitted by the enumerators, still the general total of the census would not be seriously affected for the purpose of this discussion.

EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS—CHARACTER OF THE PEOPLE.

As to the educational progress of the people of the Territory, taken as a whole, it may be considered fair. Of course, in towns like Prescott (population, 3,559) or Phoenix (population, 5,554) or Tucson (population, 7,531) the schools are altogether admirable. School buildings in these three towns compare favorably with much larger towns even in the best portions of the entire country. It is also true that nowhere in the Republic are to be found men and women of higher quality in all that makes good citizenship than the people in these localities.

Many of them, as in New Mexico, have been drawn to these towns because of their illness and the healthful condition of these regions; for it is well known that no place in the world is better for certain kinds of ailment, particularly consumption, than the high altitude, dry air and perpetual sunshine of Arizona and New Mexico. Many of the best citizens of these Territories went there on this account, recovered their health in full measure and are among the most enterprising and valuable of the population of the Territories. They are almost without exception men and women of superior education and culture and bring with them the best customs and traditions of the American people. Others have been attracted to the valley which surrounds Phoenix because of the exceeding beauty of the spot. Still others, mostly the young, earnest, and adventurous spirits, have gone to certain of the towns of these Territories hoping to find there advantages and circumstances of fortune not obtained with equal ease in the more densely settled portions of the country.

But while these elements are important and invaluable to the Territory, and while their influence is altogether for good and will steadily grow, it can not be truthfully said that at the present time they are in sufficient number to dominate the mass of the inhabitants of the Territory. This is proved by the fact that saloons and gambling establishments are, by the statutes of the Territory, permitted openly to run at night and by day, on Sunday as well as week days, and attempts to repeal this law have been futile. (Testimony.)

But even were all the people of the Territory of the admirable class above described, they still would be far too few to justify statehood.

ILLITERACY.

Twenty-nine out of every 100 can not read or write any language whatever. Schools in the Territory outside of the towns mentioned, and perhaps three or four others, while active, have not yet accomplished great results. This is proved by the fact that of the entire population of Arizona 29 per cent can neither read nor write any language. Twenty-nine per cent of illiteracy in a population of 122,000, substantially all of whom are Caucasians, is a condition whose seriousness is appreciated by no one more than by the progressive people of that Territory themselves. In addition to the immigrants from the other States of the Union for reasons of health, pleasure, or profit, there is a considerable and constant immigration from Mexico. This is illustrated by the fact that of the whole population of the Territory 12,000, who can speak no English, are of Old Mexican parentage, and out of the entire population 28,911, or 23.52 per cent, speak no English whatever.

UNIVERSITY OF ARIZONA.

At Tucson, Arizona has a Territorial university worthy of praise. Its buildings are excellent, its president and instructors efficient, and its attendance, while small, is nevertheless encouraging. As is the case with the University of New Mexico, it is a promising mark of development.

As in New Mexico, the occupations of the people of Arizona are confined to agriculture, grazing, and mining.

INDUSTRIES: AGRICULTURE.

As in New Mexico also, the agriculture is absolutely dependent upon irrigation. The chief regions where irrigation is employed are in the valley of the Salt River, near Phoenix, and the valley of the Gila and a portion of land near Yuma, in the valley of the Colorado. Of these, the region around Phoenix is the most extensive and by far the most perfect. Here an elaborate system of canals has been constructed and agriculture is carried to the highest point yet developed in the Southwest; and yet agriculture has here reached its limit (until the storage or impounding system is successfully established) simply from lack of water in the river.

The volume of water in this stream is not only insufficient but uncertain. Two or three years of scanty rainfall or of snowfall in the mountains shrinks the available water to a compass greatly insufficient for the lands already served by the system of canals. Many ranches are at present unproductive, and, some of the less hopeful think, actually ruined by this absence of water. For example, Mr. Fowler, of Phoenix, was this year able actually to irrigate only 40 acres of a ranch of nearly 400 acres, and he was able to do this only by paying for water for 160 acres. (Statement of Mr. Fowler.)

This illustration, given by one of the most effective advocates for statehood for Arizona who appeared before the subcommittee, is a fair illustration of actual conditions.

The total amount of land actually under cultivation by irrigation in the whole Territory for the present year is in the neighborhood of 185,000 acres. (Testimony of Dwight B. Heard, F. H. Newell, and others.)

The whole area under irrigation canals, were there water enough to serve the canals already constructed, is 0.25 per cent of the entire area of the Territory, which is 72,268,800 acres. (Testimony of Professor Newell.) Aside from the portions now under irrigation little remains for like treatment "except in the contingency of very extensive storage in the future." (Testimony of Professor Newell.)

RESULTS OF SUCCESSFUL IRRIGATION.

For this limited and precarious condition of agriculture there is no remedy except the impounding of waters, which is problematical and a matter for the future. Should the great scheme for the impounding of flood waters as well as of rainfall be a success, great future possibilities exist in both the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, for the soil in the river valleys, when under irrigation, is surprisingly productive, all kinds of semi-tropical fruits thriving luxuriantly, the cereals being produced in great abundance, and alfalfa, which is a superior fodder for cattle, being produced to the extent of six and even eight cuttings a year. All this, however, is absolutely and utterly dependent upon the artificial application of water by irrigation. (Testimony of Mr. Fowler, Mr. Heard, and others.)

RAINFALL IN ARIZONA.

That no relief can be expected by rainfall is admitted. (Testimony of Mr. Fowler, Mr. Heard and others.)

This also is shown by the precipitation throughout the Territory, which is:

	Inches a year.
Fort Mohave	5.99
Gila Bend	5.86
Phoenix	7.22
Tucson	12.11
Yuma	2.97

In the neighborhood of the mountains, of course, it is heavier, being:

	Inches a year.
Bisbee	17.06
Fort Apache	20.94
Flagstaff	22.24
Fort Defiance	13.12
Prescott	15.62

These mountain precipitations are no substantial aid to agriculture except in affording water for the streams.

The same observations as to the nature of this rainfall that have been made as to New Mexico are even more true as to Arizona. (Letter of Professor Newell, above.)

STOCK RAISING.

In Arizona, as in New Mexico, grazing leads agriculture, to which, indeed, agriculture is chiefly an adjunct. But the same grazing limit of distance from water courses or "water holes" (5 miles on either side for cattle and a greater distance for horses and sheep) applies alike to the two Territories.

The extent and value of the agriculture and live stock of Arizona at present are shown by the following table, prepared by the statistician of the Agricultural Department:

Acreage, production, and value of farm products in 1901, and number of live stock in 1900, Twelfth Census.

	Acres.	Bushels.	Value.
Wheat	26,047	567,825	$482,651
Corn	9,871	177,678	159,910
Oats	1,780	62,300	37,380
Barley	13,280	381,136	259,172
Rye	----------	----------	----------
Buckwheat	----------	----------	----------
Potatoes	----------	----------	----------
		Tons.
Hay	70,938	202,173	1,855,948

	Number.	Value.
Horses	125,063	$1,701,905
Mules	4,077	123,539
Milch cows	375,684	6,479,657
Other cattle	366,951	4,887,809
Sheep	924,761	1,901,764
Swine	18,103	80,587

The comparative value of the above is illustrated when we reflect that Minnesota produced at the same time 80,102,627 bushels of wheat and 35,797,456 bushels of corn, and Michigan 13,702,939 bushels of wheat and 45,536,550 bushels of corn.

The assessed valuation of property last year in Arizona was $38,853,831. Compare this assessed valuation with the valuation of property in Oklahoma for the same year, which was $60,464,696; or with Rhode Island, whose assessed valuation for 1901 was $413,209,603.

ARIZONA FORESTS.

Like New Mexico, Arizona has an extensive and valuable forest belt, and the same observations heretofore made concerning the forests of New Mexico apply equally to those of Arizona and need not be again repeated.

MINING.

But the great occupation of the people of Arizona is mining, and the great resources of Arizona are its mineral deposits. In this much development has already occurred; and it is asserted that immense bodies of ore, notably copper and gold, exist in various portions of the Territory. (Testimony of Judge Sloan and others.)

As is the case in all mining communities, verification of these claims is uncertain and a matter for the future. All that can be taken into account is the present development. Of this the chief is the mining of copper, in the production of which Arizona stands third, Michigan and Montana alone being ahead of it. Of the copper mines, the Verde mines, belonging to Senator Clark, of Montana; the Copper Queen, belonging to Phelps, Dodge & Co., of New York; the mines of the Shannon Copper Company; the Black Warrior Company's mines, and the properties of a great Scotch corporation are the principal. Of the gold mines, the Pierce mine, the Congress mine, and the Commonwealth mine are probably among the most remarkable.

The actual output at present is shown by the following table:

Clay products	$101,954.00	$112,737.00	----------
Raw clay	----------	2,000.00	----------

GOLD.

	1899.	1900.	1901.
California	$15,197,800	$15,816,200	$16,891,400

Montana	20,810,990	8,801,148	7,879,020

a Coining value; all other estimates at commercial value.

UNCERTAIN FUTURE OF MINING CAMPS—HISTORY OF TOMBSTONE.

The greatest mining center of the Territory is Bisbee, near the Mexican line. Cochise County, in which this town, or "mining camp," as the mining town is universally termed, is located, has 9,251 population, although many more are "claimed." (Bisbee not being incorporated in 1900, its separate census was not taken.) The committee does not think that the purely mining population, at least of so limited extent as that of Arizona, is sufficient basis for a State.

The fortunes of this kind of population are as uncertain as the extent of the ore deposit they seek—one day thriving, prosperous, full of enterprise and hope, the next day the "city" deserted by a dejected population. "Boomers," speculators, and even mine owners will assert with enthusiasm that the ore deposits are sufficient for a century and even for centuries, and this may be true; but the reliability of such claims when considered in so grave a matter as the basis for population for statehood is illustrated by the melancholy history of Tombstone, Ariz. This place only a few years ago was a city of thousands of inhabitants, prosperous with the sudden richness of its mines. To-day its mines are not in operation, and but 646 people remain. Efforts are now being made to operate the mines again.

All who have noted the exciting career of purely mining towns, and especially those who have been through numbers of abandoned "cities," which only a year before were filled with a people intoxicated with the peculiar enthusiasm of the "mining camp," will appreciate the comparative certainty and uncertainty of that industry.

RAILROAD DEVELOPMENT.

The railroad development in Arizona, which is considerable, has been due almost entirely to the mining development, and even more lines, short, it is true, but not to be overlooked, are in construction or contemplation.

MINING POPULATION TRANSIENT; STATEHOOD FOREVER.

But should it be conceded that the mines now being worked will last for a century and that others even richer will be opened, that circumstance is not sufficient basis for a population for the purposes of statehood, for statehood is not a thing of to-day or to-morrow. It is not a thing for a century to come. It is a thing for all centuries and all time to come. And after a State is admitted, if for any reason its population decreases even to a hundred or to fifty, or indeed, to use an extravagant example, to the three necessary to represent it as Senators and Congressman in the National Legislature, there are no means at present known to our Constitution to remedy that serious condition. That decreasing population is not an imaginary contingency will occur to anyone who will reflect that not all States which in the past have been admitted to the Union have grown in population, but, on the contrary, actual decrease has occurred. People go where they may thrive and prosper, and they leave when those reasons fail. The absence of statehood will not prevent them coming. The presence of statehood will not induce them to come. Its existence will not cause them to remain.

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT DOES NOT RETARD LEGITIMATE AND PERMANENT DEVELOPMENT.

This suggests the consideration most seriously urged for New Mexico and Arizona that their development is retarded by the absence of statehood and will be increased by its bestowal. But Oklahoma has not needed statehood for its development. The people have poured into that Territory by the hundred thousands, built excellent homes, developed splendid farms, and erected busy, substantial, and permanent cities.

The Indian Territory even with no form of government at all has nevertheless attracted hundreds of thousands of American citizens from the other States of the Union, who have opened its mines, worked its fields, and built up towns which astonish the observer and confound even the most confident believer in the energy of the American people when the untoward conditions of the Indian Territory are considered.

Statehood was not required for this extraordinary development. Even the absence of Territorial form of government did not prevent it. It was caused by the natural conditions under which the people prosper. Soil, climate, rainfall, abundant water courses, timber, mines of coal, marble, and ore—these were the sufficient inducement for immigration, and these and these alone are the only basis for permanent population.

OKLAHOMA'S ARGUMENT AGAINST IMMEDIATE STATEHOOD.

Statehood has not been required by Oklahoma and Indian Territory to induce the building of railroads. Opportunities for profitable traffic did that, and no other honest cause can exist for such development. There are large numbers of citizens of substance, character, and intelligence in Oklahoma who now protest against statehood upon the ground of the exceeding present prosperity of the people of both country and city, and who declare that if statehood is granted at present the people now free from debt, and kept so by the 4 per cent limitation beyond which a Territory may not go, will be induced by railroad promoters to vote bonds in aid of their enterprises, thus burdening the coming generation with a heavy debt, as was the case in some other new States. And it is contended that if the people are permitted to remain for a few years longer in their present happy condition they will secure all the railroads needed, built by capital invested by the owners of the lines instead of money taken from the pockets of the people. (Testimony of A. H. Classen and others.)

IF "CLAIMS" OF DEVELOPMENT TRUE, TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT HAS NOT PREVENTED DEVELOPMENT.

That Territorial government does not prevent immigration and development and is not needed to induce it is proved by the immigration in the last decade into the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, which is equal to that of Idaho and other States, notwithstanding the fact that they are States, while Arizona and New Mexico are Territories. If it be said that a sudden torrent of population came down on these States immediately upon admission, the answer is that a great flood of population even more permanent poured over the prairies of Dakota before statehood, and that the same human deluge inundated the rolling farm land of Oklahoma. The further answer is that even if there was a sudden accession of population in certain States immediately after their admission, it is certain that the same population, if it is permanent, would have also come, not less healthfully because more slowly, if natural conditions actually justified it.

The contention that Territorial government retards immigration and development is further negatived by the "claims" of those who urge statehood for Arizona and New Mexico, for if these claims be true it can not also be true that the absence of statehood has retarded population, investment, or development, since those claims are very generous indeed.

STATEHOOD A REWARD OF, NOT AN INDUCEMENT FOR, DEVELOPMENT.

The argument that statehood should be conferred to aid development betrays a profound and fundamental misconception of the nature of a State and its relations to the nation, for statehood should come as the reward of development and not as its inducement. Development and population should precede statehood, and not the reverse. Statehood should be granted as a great prize well earned, not as an instrument of the speculator, the "boomer," or the politically ambitious, for, be it remembered, not only are the interests of the proposed State concerned, but the destinies of the entire nation are involved.

THE ARGUMENT OF SELF-GOVERNMENT.

This compels consideration of a much-used argument that the people of a Territory are deprived of self-government and are entitled as of right to this great privilege. This argument is refuted by the fact that the people of Territories enjoy all of the substance of self-government that the people of the States enjoy, save only the power of creating unlimited debt. They may not burden themselves and their children without the consent of Congress beyond the fixed limit of 4 per cent. It is easy to see how persons interested in enterprises which they hope for aid from the people's pockets might want this restriction removed; but it is not easy to see what advantage it will be to the people themselves to have it removed.

THE PEOPLE HAVE "SELF-GOVERNMENT;" THE JUDICIARY.

In other respects the people are self-governing; they have their own legislature, which they themselves elect. This legislature passes all, or practically all, laws which a State legislature may pass. Their taxes are fixed and levied by themselves. Their schools are established and maintained by themselves. Their crimes and rights are determined, punished, and enforced by themselves. Their governors are appointed by the President of the United States, but under the practice now established this governor is always one of themselves; and no Administration would at this day in the Republic's history keep in office a governor seriously distasteful to the majority of the people.

The judges also are appointed by the President, but the character and ability of the judges in the Territories, with few exceptions, are now equal to those of the judiciary of the rest of the country, State or national. The general opinion on this subject is that the present judiciary of these Territories is singularly high in point of excellence and satisfactory to the litigants and the people. (Testimony of Messrs. Fowler, Kibbey, Childers, Clawson.)

The committee does not believe that so excellent a judiciary would be secured by a popular vote at the present time in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as that which at present distinguishes its bench. And this will be the case for many years to come.

IF THE TERRITORIAL FEDERAL JUDICIARY IS DENIAL OF SELF-GOVERNMENT THE SUPREME AND FEDERAL COURTS ARE SUCH A DENIAL ALSO.

If the appointment of judges is a deprivation of self-government, then the Supreme Court of the United States and the entire Federal judiciary of the United States is much more such a deprivation, for they are appointed for life, whereas Territorial judges are appointed for four years. The decided and growing sentiment in favor of a permanent judiciary in the States similar to the Federal judiciary does not indicate that appointment of judges is considered by the people a necessary element of self-government. It is a question of serious importance among the most thoughtful whether the elective judiciary, holding office for short terms, subject to the vicissitudes of party fortunes, and more or less under obligation to professional politicians, is as good for the people as a permanent judiciary above the seductions of favor or the menace of fear.

REPRESENTATION IN HOUSE AND SENATE ALL THAT IS SOUGHT.

So that upon the question of self-government the whole matter is narrowed down to a voting representation in Congress, and this affects the people of the Territory only as it has to do with the shaping of the various policies of the entire nation; and thus this argument is reduced to the crux of the whole matter, to wit, the requisites entitling a body of territory to a participation in the formation of great national policies.

So that we come back again to a discussion of the number of people thus required, of their preparedness, and of the considerations already discussed.

The committee does not think that any of the requisites for such absorption into the national body, affecting the whole future history of the other 76,000,000 of people constituting the nation, exist in the case of either Arizona or New Mexico. Some comparisons will strikingly show this so far as the number of people are concerned and will demonstrate the wisdom of the rule established by the ordinance of 1787, when applied in its relative proportions to the conditions of the country to-day. We have seen that if the proportion which the fathers fixed for future States were applied to the population of the Republic to-day in the question of admission of Territories applying for statehood, a population of over 1,153,000 would be required.

COMPARISONS.

And we have seen that Arizona has 122,931, or 1.1 to the square mile; and New Mexico has 195,310 people, or 1.6 to the square mile.

Consider now that the population of New Mexico is less than that of Jersey City, N. J.; less than Louisville, Ky.; less than Memphis, Tenn.

Consider that New Orleans alone has over 90,000 more people than the entire Territory of New Mexico; Detroit has 90,000 more people; so has Milwaukee; and Washington has over 80,000 more people.

Newark, N. J., could replace every man, woman, and child in New Mexico and still have 50,000 left.

COMPARISONS WITH LARGER CITIES.

And yet the above-named cities are not considered large. Compare the population of the Territories with the next classes of cities. Cleveland, Ohio, has almost twice as many people as New Mexico. Buffalo, N. Y., has 150,000 more people than New Mexico and over 25,000 more than New Mexico and Arizona put together.

San Francisco alone has over 140,000 more people than New Mexico and over 20,000 more than New Mexico and Arizona put together.

Cincinnati, Ohio, has more people than New Mexico and Arizona put together, and so has Pittsburg, Pa.

COMPARISONS WITH STILL LARGER CITIES.

To go to a still more populous class of cities, St. Louis has over 380,000 more people than New Mexico and more than 250,000 more than New Mexico and Arizona put together.

Boston has over 360,000 more people than New Mexico and nearly 240,000 more than New Mexico and Arizona combined.

COMPARED WITH NEW YORK AND CHICAGO.

When we compare the population of these two Territories with the great cities the contrast becomes startling. New York is hundreds of thousands more than ten times as large as both New Mexico and Arizona put together.

Chicago is over a hundred thousand more than five times as large as New Mexico and Arizona put together. The population of Chicago alone would make eight States as large as New Mexico and have enough left to make one larger than Arizona.

PHILADELPHIA AND PENNSYLVANIA COMPARISONS.

Philadelphia alone would make six States as large as New Mexico. So that if we do not utterly abandon the idea of government by population instead of a government of square miles, a citizen of New Mexico would have six times the voting power in the Senate of the United States that the citizen of Pennsylvania would, even were Pennsylvania confined entirely to the limits of Philadelphia alone.

Philadelphia would make more than ten States as large as Arizona, so that the citizen of Arizona would have in the Senate of the United States nearly eleven times the voting power of the citizens of Pennsylvania were Pennsylvania confined to the limits of Philadelphia alone, and Philadelphia would make four States as large as New Mexico and Arizona put together.

COMPARISONS WITH WARDS OF OUR GREAT CITIES.

Indeed, we need not go to the cities. We can even go to their wards. One ward alone in New York has a population only 1,600 less than the whole Territory of Arizona, and there are large numbers of wards in New York and Chicago any three of which are more populous than all of New Mexico.

COMPARISONS WITH MINOR CITIES.

The contrast becomes more vivid when we take the minor cities of the Republic. For example:

Providence, R. I., has over 50,000 more people than all of Arizona and nearly 20,000 less than all of New Mexico.

Indianapolis has 45,000 more people than all of Arizona and only 25,000 less than all New Mexico.

Each of the following cities have more population than Arizona: Allegheny, Pa.; Rochester, N. Y.; Toledo, Ohio; Denver, Colo.; Kansas City, Mo.; St. Paul, Minn.; Columbus, Ohio.

The entire Territory of Arizona is less than 5,000 more than Worcester, Mass.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., NEARLY EQUAL TO ARIZONA.

Syracuse, N. Y., has only about 15,000 less than Arizona.

Fall River, Mass., has within 20,000 as many people as Arizona.

St. Joseph, Mo., Los Angeles, Cal., Memphis, Tenn., Scranton, Pa., each have within 22,000 as many people as Arizona.

Scranton, Pa., and St. Joseph, Mo., combined, are larger than the entire Territory of New Mexico.

The city of New York is more than fifteen times as large as the entire Territory of New Mexico, over twenty-five times as large as Arizona, over ten times as large as New Mexico and Arizona put together.

STATE COMPARISONS.

The State of Indiana would make ten States as populous as New Mexico and have enough left to make two as populous as Arizona, and still have enough left to double the population of Phoenix and Tucson, the principal towns in that Territory.

Were population alone considered a requisite for representation in the Senate of the United States, if Arizona should have two Senators, Ohio should have more than thirty, Illinois nearly forty, and Pennsylvania fifty.

COMPARISON WITH SMALLER CITIES.

The disparity of voting power is still more startling when we consider that Evansville, South Bend, and Fort Wayne, Ind., have a much greater population than all of Arizona; and if you add to these Lafayette, Marion, Richmond, Muncie, and Terre Haute you have over 40,000 more people in these towns than in the entire Territory of New Mexico.

And there are numbers of towns in the State of Indiana any twenty of which outvote the entire Territory of New Mexico.

Kansas has four cities which combined have more people than the entire population of the Territory of Arizona, namely, Topeka, Wichita, Leavenworth, and Kansas City.

Maine has six towns which put together have considerably more than Arizona, namely, Auburn, Augusta, Bangor, Biddeford, Lewiston, and Portland.

Texas is covered with towns many groups of which outvote either New Mexico or Arizona. For example, San Antonio, Houston, Galveston, Fort Worth, Dallas, and Austin are more populous than New Mexico, while Waco, Sherman, Laredo, and El Paso, if added to San Antonio, would be nearly equal in population to Arizona.

COMPARISONS WITH TOWNS IN NEWER STATES.

Or take towns in a newer State—Washington, for example. The State of Washington has three cities exceeding in population the entire Territory of Arizona, namely, Seattle, Spokane, and Tacoma. If to these are added Walla Walla, Port Townsend, New Whatcom, Everett, Fairhaven, Ballard, and Aberdeen, we have a population exceeding the entire population of New Mexico.

PURPOSE OF ABOVE ILLUSTRATIONS.

These illustrations are, of course, not given to prove that there should be an equality of population in all of the States, but to demonstrate the reasonableness of the proposition that a new State must have a population bearing some just proportion to the population of the nation as a whole, and they illustrate the serious disparity in power in national legislation between the rest of the nation and these two Territories, mighty in area, but scanty in people.

They emphasize the inherent injustice to the rest of the nation involved in placing the policies of the country, both foreign and domestic, and the destiny of the Republic for all time to come in the hands of so small a number of fellow-citizens, even though every individual in these Territories were the finest possible type mentally, morally, and in the educational qualifications.

How much greater is the force of these considerations when to them are added the alien speech of the great majority of the people of New Mexico and many of the people of Arizona and the high rate of illiteracy, diminishing though that illiteracy may happily be.

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

In striking contrast to the unpreparedness for statehood of Arizona and New Mexico is the preparedness of Oklahoma and Indian Territory. The population of Oklahoma, according to the census of 1900, was 398,331; of the Indian Territory, 392,060. Personal inspection will convince anyone that the tide of immigration since that census was taken has swollen the population of these two Territories combined to at least a million, and in all probability over that. Excellent lands still unoccupied in Oklahoma in 1900 have been taken up with amazing rapidity every day since, and the progress continues, while the immigration into the Indian Territory can not be appreciated nor even believed until the evidences of it are witnessed.

And of the hundreds of thousands of people in the Indian Territory less than 87,000 are Indians. This fact is important to those who have taken it for granted that the population of the Indian Territory is of the latter race.

All the conditions prevail which work for the absorption of this heterogeneous element into the body of our homogeneous citizenship.

While no comparison is made of the Indians of the Indian Territory to the so-called Mexicans of New Mexico (although the latter are of Mexican, Indian, and Spanish people), this comparison can be justly made, that whereas in New Mexico out of an aggregate population of 195,310 a great majority are Spanish-speaking natives, belonging by descent, tradition, instinct, and speech to another civilization and system of institutions, in the Indian Territory out of an aggregate population between 400,000 and 500,000, less than 87,000 are Indians, the overwhelming body of the people being immigrants from other States of the Union, the children and product of our institutions, "bone of our bone and blood of our blood."

OKLAHOMA'S DEVELOPMENT.

The great body of Oklahoma is magnificently developed. It is a farming land unsurpassed in fertility and loveliness by any section of the Union. Thriving towns, quite equal to those of the Central States, are the universal rule, instead of the oasis-like exception. Four or five of Oklahoma's cities are beyond praise in the solidity of their business houses, the affluent solvency of their banks, the enterprise of their newspapers, the beauty and perfection of their homes.

There is one daily newspaper in Oklahoma with a bona fide daily circulation of 18,000. There are wholesale houses that do a business of $1,500,000 a year and one or two that reach the proportions of over $2,000,000 annually. Railroad traffic, both passenger and freight, is unsurpassed by any similar agricultural region of the United States. The school development throughout the Territory is superb. The homes and barns of the farmers in the older portions of the Territory (and no portion of the Territory is much older than a decade) are commodious, handsome, and not surpassed, if, indeed, on the average they are equaled, elsewhere in the whole country.

The resources of Oklahoma Territory are purely agricultural and all cereals are raised with ease and abundance, and cotton is one of the staple products of this region.

OKLAHOMA ALONE INADMISSIBLE.

But the proposition to admit this Territory as a single State is not tenable. Its size is much below that of any Western State. It must not be forgotten that originally Oklahoma was taken piecemeal from the Indian Territory. Its boundaries are unscientific, accidental, and grotesque. And above all, the committee are convinced that a majority of its people are opposed to statehood at present except by a union with its natural complement, the Indian Territory.

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY A NATURAL UNIT.

For the Indian Territory has been made by nature the ideal mate to Oklahoma. What Oklahoma lacks the Territory supplies, and the reverse. Oklahoma is practically without coal and minerals and building stone; Indian Territory is rich in all these. Oklahoma is practically without timber; the Indian Territory bears great forests. Its timber, stone, quarries of marble, mines of coal and ore afford unanswerable natural reasons for a union with its western neighbor.

Commerce has recognized this natural union, and railroads have been built and still others are building, and others still are projected in recognition of the natural union of these two industrial empires.

PEOPLE OF OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY UNITED.

But most of all, the people themselves have recognized this great fact. The commercial life of the two Territories are one. The Wholesalers' Association of Oklahoma and Indian Territory are the same. Their religion is a unit. The Catholic Church has the same bishop for the two Territories; the Episcopal Church has the same bishop, while the Epworth League, common to the two Territories, is building a noble structure for university purposes by funds contributed alike by its members throughout the two Territories as if there were no artificial dividing line. In natural resources, commercial affairs, social intercourse, and in religious life, the Territories are a unit.

What nature, commerce, and all human conditions have decreed the Congress of the United States should confirm. The two Territories should be made one State and immediately admitted to the Union. Together they make a State about the size of Kansas or Nebraska, and much smaller than the average State west of the Missouri River. As a single State they would make a noble addition to the nation of which their people and the citizens of the whole Republic would be justly proud.

NO REASON AGAINST REUNION OF OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

On the other hand, for Congress deliberately to rend asunder this already united people, either for political reasons or because of the existence of an accidental dividing line between them, would be an act violent to every reason of the situation and grotesque and absurd to future generations. The statesmen of the future would rightly survey such an act in disgust; while the historian would find it hard to explain the causes for a performance so unnatural and unjustified. Against the confirmation by Congress of the union of these Territories no constitutional reason can be urged, nor can any reason of expediency be suggested. The lands of the Indians have already been allotted in enormous quantities and the allotment is proceeding with celerity. Before statehood government can be organized the quantity of Indian land remaining will not be appreciable.

If it be said that Indian lands thus allotted are free from taxation for five years and that this throws an unjust burden on Oklahoma, the answer is that this period of exemption will, by the time required to establish a State government, be reduced in great part to three and even two years; and even if this exemption from taxation were a matter worthy of the consideration of statesmanship in so large a problem, it is more than offset by the provision of the bill which shares the burden of existing debt of Oklahoma with the Indian Territory. If it be said that this debt be insignificant, the answer is that the period of exemption from taxation of Indian lands together with the amount first received from them are proportionately insignificant.

In short, the Indian Territory and Oklahoma combined have a numerous people of culture, progress, and of resources already considerably developed, and thus every requisite for statehood which can suggest itself to the thoughtful and conservative mind is present. To deny such a people in such a region admission into the Union is wrong, and to divide them for reasons of partisan expediency is disgraceful.

OKLAHOMAN'S ARGUMENT AGAINST ANY STATEHOOD FOR THE PRESENT.

The committee has reached this conclusion after considering the argument presented by the citizens appearing before the committee against the present admission of either or both Territories as a State, although the committee is profoundly impressed with the solidity of this argument.

We have heretofore in this report called attention to the contention of the citizens of Oklahoma that their condition is highly prosperous; that the people are happy and out of debt; that the Federal officials are satisfactory to the point of popular applause; that railroads exist in gratifying mileage, built by the money of legitimate investors and not as the scheme of ephemeral promoters, and that more are building and will be built by the same laudable means; that if the Territory remains in its present felicitous condition a few years will give it all the railroads it will need without burdening the people to build them; but that, on the contrary, if admitted to statehood the history of other States will be repeated—that the people will be induced to bond their future to construct roads which should be built by the money of legitimate investors, who alone will reap their profits; that other roads will be projected and constructed by unsubstantial promoters, deriving their means from popular contributions, which they know so well how to secure; and that those people and their children will be oppressed for a generation with an unnecessary and wicked burden of taxation.

No thoughtful mind can deny the force of this reason. And yet, in spite of it, it seems to the committee that these two Territories should be admitted to the Union as a single State. They have reached their manhood and should take on manhood's responsibilities. They do not need incorporation into the active political nation more than the active political nation needs them.

APPLICATION OF OKLAHOMA'S REASONS ELSEWHERE.

The argument against the admission of Oklahoma made by her own citizens also applies to the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. With the immature development of those Territories; with the peculiar conditions of their people, and particularly those of New Mexico; with the docile and easily persuaded character of the native population of the latter Territory, it is as certain as the future that they will be induced—and that with great ease—to vote enormous subsidies to proposed railroads, sadly impoverishing themselves while enriching the enterprising promoters. This is not an imaginary forecast, but a future certainty, and it is a certainty from which the innocent people of New Mexico should be protected. As they are, the shield of the national limitation of 4 per cent upon their indebtedness stands between them and exploiters. Remove it, and they are defenseless in their ignorance and confiding simplicity against that masterful vigor and artful craft which the exploiter always brings to his aid.

MANY NEW MEXICANS AGAINST STATEHOOD.

In conclusion, the truth must be stated that many of the people of New Mexico do not want statehood. The testimony of Martinez Amador, a Mexican farmer, who (unsubpœnaed and unasked, because unknown to us) sought out the committee at Las Cruces and who impressed every member with his sincerity, wisdom, and truthfulness, proves this. The testimony is as pathetic as it is convincing, and we call to it particular attention.

The committee is further convinced that this opposition to statehood for New Mexico is by no means confined to this simple Mexican farmer and the great class for whom he spoke. It is true that no other rancher, farmer, or merchant appeared before the committee to the same effect; but the committee has sound reasons for believing that large numbers of them are earnestly against the proposition of New Mexican statehood. It is not believed that any advocate of New Mexican statehood competent to speak will testify under oath that there is unanimity in favor of the proposition even among the most substantial business men, farmers and cattlemen of the Territory.

It is the further belief of the committee that a large portion of the people are indifferent to and ignorant of the question. If it be said that they voted in favor of it, the answer is that nothing is easier than to appeal to a people like the native New Mexican with a statement that there is something which he has not (and which will be of value to him) in order to make him desire it, without understanding in the least just what it is that he is deprived of. It is a cheap and familiar device, formerly used in our own States, but now happily abandoned before the enlightenment and independence of civic action which comes with increased education and highly developed civilization. If it be said that this argument is not sound, the answer is that the people have more than once rejected a constitution for statehood.

This suggests another and final grave condition, common alike to New Mexico and Arizona, namely, not only the smallness of their population, but the thin scattering of the same over enormous distances of vast domain. Arizona has 1.1 persons for each square mile; New Mexico has 1.6 persons for each square mile. Among this scattered population the means of communication are few and ineffective. The gravity of this in political campaigns and in that close association which is the prime factor in a high civilization will be appreciated when you reflect that in Massachusetts the population is 348 to the square mile; in Pennsylvania 140 to the square mile; in New Jersey 250.3 to the square mile.

In addition to the above, the House bill, known as the "Omnibus bill," is defective in many important particulars, some of which are worthy of note as indicating ideas prevailing there of a State under the constitutional form of government. For example, that portion of the so-called omnibus bill providing for the admission of Arizona makes in the bill itself an apportionment for the constitutional convention. The following representatives in the constitutional conventions are given with the following counties, with the population of each county:

County.	Delegates.	Population.
Apache	2	8,297
Cochise	4	9,251
Coconino	2	5,514
Gila	2	4,973
Graham	3	14,162
Maricopa	5	20,457
Mohave	2	3,426
Navajo	2	8,829
Pima	3	14,689
Pinal	3	7,779
Santa Cruz	2	4,545
Yavapai	4	13,799
Yuma	2	4,145

This apportionment requires either no comment or else extended explanation. The apportionment becomes more puzzling the more it is studied. The omnibus bill also is singularly inharmonious in methods provided for the admission of the respective Territories; and this lack of harmony in its provisions can be accounted for by the committee only upon the principle that the admission of each Territory is a proposition standing by itself and that they are incapable of consideration bunched together. If this is not the explanation, the true explanation can probably be given by those who favor the so-called "Omnibus bill."

In conclusion, the committee asks the Senate to consider the following:

If it is a mistake not to admit these Territories at the present time, it is a mistake which can be remedied by any future Congress. If it is a mistake to admit them, and that mistake is consummated, it never can be undone.

The committee feel that it is wiser and better for the Territories themselves, and for the Nation, that they shall wait that development which the resources claimed by their advocates will justify. When that occurs, when all of the requisites for statehood shall have been supplied, the members of the committee who are against the present admission of these Territories in their present state will be as enthusiastic and earnest for their admission as their most ardent advocates.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire at this time to withdraw the amendment to the bill which I reported the other day for the purpose of perfecting it; and I give notice that I shall again offer it at a future day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the right to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. QUAY. Not without the action of the committee. That is a committee amendment, as I understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator having made the report as the mouthpiece of the committee, and he has the right to withdraw the amendment until it has been amended or the yeas and nays have been ordered on it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me to present the testimony taken by the committee?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In connection with the report, I desire to present the testimony taken by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What request does the Senator make regarding the testimony?

Mr. BATE. Does the Senator want to have it printed?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is the desire of the committee to have both the report and the testimony printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be printed, in the absence of objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Before this subject passes away, I suggest that a certain number of extra copies of the report ought to be printed, as also the views of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] who made a report on his own motion. I have already had some letters requesting copies of the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let a thousand extra copies be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that 5,000 extra copies be printed.

Mr. KEAN. What is the number?

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that 5,000 extra copies be printed, though that may not be enough.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana whether he desires to have the report and the testimony printed together?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] and other Senators is that the report and the testimony be printed separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order then will be made that the report and the testimony be printed separately.

Mr. BATE. I desire it to be understood that this does not deprive the minority of the right to submit their views at any time, if they desire to do so.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly not.

Mr. QUAY. It seems to me the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] ought to include the minority report, which will undoubtedly proceed from the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

Mr. ALLISON. My idea was that the minority report, if there be a minority report, could be easily prepared and printed with the report of the majority.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senate is to wait a day or two for a minority report, it will necessarily delay the consideration of this bill for that length of time.

Mr. BATE. I do not ask that. I only ask permission at any time to submit the views of the minority, and have them printed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. They can be printed separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] asks unanimous consent that 5,000 copies of the report of the committee and the testimony be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. QUAY. Both reports.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understood the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to include the report made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I think they ought to be printed jointly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Including the report made by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. Printed jointly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think it only fair that the hearings had by the committee before adjournment at the last session should also be included in the testimony to be printed as supplemental to it.

Mr. ALLISON. They should be included. The testimony is somewhat voluminous, and I do not know that it will be necessary to print as many as 5,000 copies of that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Say 3,000 copies.

Mr. ALLISON. I will suggest that a smaller number than 5,000 copies may be sufficient.

Mr. GALLINGER. Say 1,000.

Mr. KEAN. I suggest that the number be made 2,500 copies.

Mr. ALLISON. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] that 2,500 copies of the testimony be printed separately.

Mr. QUAY. And that the two reports from the committee be printed jointly.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] asks that 5,000 copies of the report, together with the views of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] submitted to-day, be printed.

Mr. BATE. And the minority report, when it comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Consent for that was given some time ago——

Mr. ALLISON. And also the evidence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And that there be also printed 2,500 copies of the evidence taken. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. Of all the evidence taken, including the testimony taken before the committee last year.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the report introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania be printed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is included.

Mr. PATTERSON. And the one of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] be printed separately? I think they ought to be printed separately.

Mr. QUAY. I think they had better be included in one document; but it is a matter of no consequence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the wish of the Senate in relation to that matter?

Mr. QUAY. I should prefer that they be printed jointly; but I have no special feeling about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request as now made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. QUAY. Now, Mr. President, I should like to know exactly what is the parliamentary condition of this bill? What is the question now pending upon the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. QUAY. With no amendment pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending now, because the amendment offered by the committee has been withdrawn.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But with notice that it will be offered, I understand, at the proper time.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to give notice that when it shall be offered, I shall move to lay it upon the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seventeen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 11, 1902, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 10, 1902.

INDIAN INSPECTORS.

Cyrus Beede, of Iowa, whose term will expire December 19, 1902, to be an Indian inspector. (Reappointment.)

James McLaughlin, of North Dakota, whose term will expire January 19, 1903, to be an Indian inspector. (Reappointment.)

Arthur M. Tinker, of Massachusetts, whose term will expire December 19, 1902, to be an Indian inspector. (Reappointment.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 10, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REVENUE BILLS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I report the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15794) to amend section 20 of an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved July 10, 1890.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of revenue bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of revenue bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of revenue bills.

AMENDMENT OF ADMINISTRATIVE CUSTOMS ACT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 15794.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15794) to amend section 20 of an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved July 10, 1890.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 20 of an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved June 10, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 20. That any merchandise deposited in any public or private bonded warehouse may be withdrawn for consumption within three years from the date of original importation on payment of the duties and charges to which it may be subject by law at the time of such withdrawal: Provided, That the same rate of duty shall be collected thereon as may be imposed by law upon like articles of merchandise imported at the time of the withdrawal: And provided further, That nothing herein shall affect or impair existing provisions of law in regard to the disposal of perishable or explosive articles."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this bill is brought here to give a legislative interpretation to what is known as section 20 of the customs administrative act. Section 20 of that act as it now stands in the law is as follows:

Any merchandise deposited in any public or private bonded warehouse may be withdrawn for consumption within three years from the date of the original importation on payment of the duties and charges to which it may be subject by law at the time of such withdrawal: Provided, That nothing herein shall affect or impair existing provisions of law in regard to the disposal of perishable or explosive articles.

Under that section of the statute it has been the invariable custom and ruling of the Treasury Department that when goods were imported from a foreign country and placed in a bonded warehouse for a period of time that at the time of their withdrawal the duty upon them should be the rate of duty then existing; that is, the rate of the duty existing at the time of the withdrawal from the bonded warehouse and not at the time of their importation, when they were placed in the bonded warehouse; and nobody had ever discovered but what this section of the statute meant just that and no more. But last week a case was decided in the district court of the southern district of New York, Judge Wallace rendering the opinion, in which the contrary was held. That case arose in regard to the importation of a cargo of sugar from Porto Rico into the United States prior to the 11th of April. The date of the ratification of the Paris treaty was on the 11th, I think, and the importation was on the 4th of April prior to the ratification of the treaty with Spain.

Of course after the ratification of that treaty, as is well known, the Treasury Department held that the rates under the Dingley bill applied to all merchandise imported into the United States from the insular possessions, and they collected the full rates of duty, whether the goods were withdrawn from the bonded warehouse or imported after the 11th of April, and after the ratification of the treaty. As is also well known to every member of the House, the decision of the Supreme Court in the insular cases was that after the ratification of the treaty the islands were no longer a foreign country and that there was no rate of duty on goods imported from those possessions to the United States, but that they should come in free. These importers, who had paid the full Dingley rates on this cargo of sugar under protest, brought action to recover back the duties. They paid some $1,400 or $1,500 when they were withdrawn. They set up these facts in their bill.

The Government interposed a demurrer, and the question came up on the demurrer; and there Justice Wallace held, for the first time since the history of this law, that these goods were dutiable at the rate of the duty existing at the time they were placed in the bonded warehouse. They were placed in the bonded warehouse on the 6th of April, before the ratification of the treaty, and while Porto Rico was yet a foreign country according to the decision of the Supreme Court. So he held that they were dutiable at the full Dingley rate which they had paid and he sustained the demurrer. This introduced a new rule, a new element, into the law as it has hitherto been construed. The Secretary of the Treasury found himself in this dilemma. He had notified the importers, and it had been the constant and uniform ruling of his Department, that these goods similarly situated should pay the rate existing at the time they were taken from the bonded warehouse.

Then he decided that inasmuch as the court had construed the law and held that the duty assessable was the duty at the time they were imported and put into the warehouse, he must observe this ruling and conform the practice of the department to it; and he promptly gave notice to this effect. Now, the parties immediately concerned in this matter are the importers of tea. As the House will remember, we passed at the last session a bill repealing all the war taxes. In the war-revenue act was a provision for a duty of 10 cents a pound on tea. We also enacted that this repeal as to teas should take effect on the 1st day of January next.

Under the former rulings of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I believe under the special instructions of the Treasury Department in regard to tea, importers had imported large cargoes of tea. It is even said that there are 70,000,000 pounds of tea now in the bonded warehouses, all of which have been imported previous to this date, and all of which have expected to take out that tea from the bonded warehouse in January free of duty. The importers have gone on under this ruling, or this practice of the Government, and have sold these teas to the jobbers and the retailers throughout the country with direct reference to their being imported free of duty.

The teas themselves have gone out in bonded cars by the carload into different parts of the country to be ready to be put on the market after the 1st day of January free of duty. The result is the importers of the country have sold these teas free of duty. Many of them have bought teas, have put them in bond, relying on being taken out free of duty on the 1st of January.

I do not know what telegrams other members of the House have had, but here are a few that I have had from different parts of the country. Everybody is excited upon the tea question as to whether they will have to pay the duty of 10 cents a pound upon all the tea in bond. Of course, if they did, it would create a great deal of distress. The only relief they could receive would be in exporting the tea and reimporting it after the 1st day of January. And, by the way, although Judge Wallace holds that the duty attached at the time the teas came into the bonded warehouse and were imported, and remained a lien upon the property, yet it remains a fact undisputed that they could export these teas and get rid of the lien and then bring them in from a foreign country on reimportation free of duty. But if they are obliged to do this it delays them in putting the teas on the market, and would cost them a million or two dollars, of which nobody would get the benefit except the steamship lines, and it would be partially recouped from the customers who had the teas throughout the United States.

In addition to this, Mr. Chairman, large quantities of teas would come in free from Canada and Great Britain without having paid any duty after the first day of January, and they would get the benefit of this—one class of customers with a large block of teas which they must pay duty on or reexport them and reimport them, and another class of teas free of duty. Of course this would work great injustice and great harm.

Further than that, Mr. Chairman, it was doubtless the intention of Congress, as it was construed by the Treasury Department and by all officials who had anything to do with this law since the time it was enacted in 1890, and this provision of the law existed before and was reenacted in 1890, that these duties were to be collected at the rate existing at the time the goods were taken from the bonded warehouse and entered into the consumption of the country. And it is right that they should pay the duty at the time they are taken from the bonded warehouse because it is only then that they come into direct competition with other goods of a like character coming in and not going into the bonded warehouse. We can not do exact justice in this case unless we amend this law, and amend it so that the courts will understand it as we understand it.

It may be said that when the question goes to a higher court that court may reverse the decision of Judge Wallace. But that proceeding takes time; and in the meanwhile here is this large amount of tea which should go into consumption—this large amount of tea upon which these duties must be paid—paid under protest. So, Mr. Chairman, there seems to be no way to relieve the present situation except by this amendment of the existing law.

But we have reported this bill in the form of a general amendment of the law so as to apply to all goods going into the bonded warehouses—a general amendment that will carry out the purposes of this administrative act as we intended at the time Congress passed it.

We have inserted another proviso in this section, and this is the only amendment that we have made to this section of the law of 1890:

Provided, That the same rate of duty shall be collected thereon as may be imposed by law upon like articles of merchandise imported at the time of the withdrawal.

That leaves everybody on an equal footing; that carries out the object of the law; that relieves the present situation; that allows our merchants throughout the country to start in on an even basis with their teas after the 1st of January; that carries out the intention of Congress in repealing this duty last spring, to take effect on the 1st day of January next. The Committee on Ways and Means was unanimous in reporting this bill, and it seems to me there can hardly be any objection to it upon the part of anybody in this House.

This measure is urged with a great deal of insistency by gentlemen interested in this trade throughout the country. Many members have shown me telegrams from persons in their local trade, and I have received a great many such telegrams myself, all urging the importance of immediate legislation. It is important that this legislation be passed, not only before the 1st of January, not only before the holiday recess of Congress, but it is important that it be passed before the 15th of the present month. Why, sir, there are a great many contracts outstanding for delivery on the 15th day of December—for the delivery of tea now in bonded warehouses—so that the new owner may take it out free of duty. The new owner wants to know what duty he is to pay or whether the tea is to come in free.

The failure to pass some legislation in reference to these contracts will lead to confusion, and it seems to me the House will cheerfully conform to the wishes of the entire tea trade of the United States in passing this bill. Although persons engaged in this line of business have in the past been divided as to the question whether there should be any duty on tea or not, yet, fortunately, in this instance, they are all united for the passage of this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How will this bill affect existing contracts?

Mr. PAYNE. Some people have contracts to deliver tea now in bonded warehouse on the 15th day of December. Of course, those who have contracted to do that under the idea that they were not to pay the duty and those who have contracted to sell under the idea that the tea was to be free from duty, will be in favor of breaking away from their contracts and seeking some legal loophole by which they may get out of those contracts, thus causing litigation. In other words, this may make imported goods cost more to the importer and the consumer than if——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why should we adopt legislation—a tariff—which will make tea, a commodity that you say we do not produce in the United States, cost more?

Mr. PAYNE. Right there, if the gentleman wants to inject a little politics into this debate, I want to say to him that I have heard a great deal of evidence on this question of the duty on tea. That duty is 10 cents a pound; and my friend jumps to the conclusion that the price of tea to the consumer is thereby increased to the amount of 10 cents a pound. But that is a mistake. Exporters of tea from China and Japan—some of them American houses and some English—all unite in the testimony that the exporters have been compelled to pay at least half of that duty—that they can get back from their American customers only 5 cents of the 10 cents duty.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much does the gentleman say is the rate of duty?

Mr. PAYNE. Ten cents a pound.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And we do not produce a particle of this tea in the United States. Why, then, impose this duty?

Mr. PAYNE. I have just stated that the exporters have had to pay half of the duty. They have not been able to force up the price of tea by adding 10 cents a pound. They did force it up 5 cents a pound in sales to wholesalers.

The testimony was divided upon another question; that was, whether the consumer of tea, the drinker of tea, did not get his tea just as cheaply with this duty of 10 cents a pound imposed upon it as he would if there were no duty. In other words, it would appear that the 5 cents a pound paid by the importer in this country was lost sight of in the passage of the tea through the hands of the wholesaler, the jobber, and the retail merchant, before it reaches the consumer, so that the consumer obtains his tea of a given grade at the same old price.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not my friend think that we had better now put anthracite and bituminous coal on the free list, so as to give the suffering people fuel to warm this tea for the people who drink it? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know whether there is any more debate desired on this bill or not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. On this side of the House we are perfectly willing to put anthracite coal on the free list, indeed, "all coals," to meet and overcome the present coal famine. This should be done at least while this coal crisis is inflicting the people.

Mr. PAYNE. That is not the question now. The question is about reforming the customs and administrative act.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to call my friend's attention to just one sad thing which I read in the paper this morning, which occurred in New Jersey yesterday. It relates to a case where a poor woman sold her infant child for $5 to get coal to keep from freezing.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose the gentleman knows what the trouble is in regard to the anthracite coal situation. He has read the newspapers. If there is no further debate on this question——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read that extract from the New York Sun of this morning's issue.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman has stated it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Here it is in the New York Sun of this morning's issue.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; I have no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee then read as follows:

SOLD HER CHILD FOR $5—WIDOWED BY COAL RIOTS, MRS. URHOUSE COULD NOT SUPPORT HER BABE.

PASSAIC, N. J., December 9, 1902.

By means of an advertisement inserted in a Passaic newspaper, Mrs. Fannie Urhouse, of this city, has succeeded in selling her 3-weeks-old son. Mrs. Urhouse's husband was killed in the recent strike in Pennsylvania. She was able to take care of herself by working for $2 a week until the child came. Friends advised her to get some one to adopt it.

The advertisement was inserted, but for three days no response came. Mrs. Urhouse became discouraged and threatened to kill herself and child. This morning, however, Mrs. John Urban, of Wallington, offered to pay $5 for the child. The offer was accepted and little Steven was taken to his new home.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield to be interrogated?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I say, if for no other reason, as a matter of charity, we ought to give the people at this time free coal to keep the people from freezing.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] desire some time?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Ways and Means, and I think it is proper.

Mr. PAYNE. If there is no further debate, I move to amend the title and substitute the word "June" for the word "July." There seems to have been a mistake made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the title strike out the word "July" and insert the word "June."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill by adding the report of the committee and having it printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks upon the bill H. R. 15794 by including the report of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report of the committee is as follows:

[House Report No. 2802, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15794) to amend section 20 of an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," report the same back without amendment, recommending its passage.

This bill proposes to amend section 20 of said act, which reads as follows:

"SEC. 20. Any merchandise deposited in any public or private bonded warehouse may be withdrawn for consumption within three years from the date of original importation, on payment of the duties and charges to which it may be subject by law at the time of such withdrawal: Provided, That nothing herein shall affect or impair existing provisions of law in regard to the disposal of perishable or explosive articles."

Under this section the Secretary of the Treasury has invariably held that on a withdrawal of bonded merchandise from the warehouse the duties to be collected are at the same rate as those existing at the time of the withdrawal and not at the time of the importation. Last week a case was decided in the circuit court of New York, which has been called to the attention of the committee by the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, viz:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 8, 1902.

MY DEAR SIR: Section 20 of the customs administrative act is in the following language:

"Any merchandise deposited in any public or private bonded warehouse may be withdrawn for consumption within three years from the date of the original importation, on payment of the duties and charges to which it may be subject by law at the time of such withdrawal."

Relying upon this section, it has been the practice of the Department to collect duty at the rate imposed by law at the time the goods are withdrawn from warehouse.

I inclose herewith a copy of the decision rendered by the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York, where it is held that warehoused goods on withdrawal for consumption are dutiable at the same rate as when warehoused.

By the recent act of Congress tea is admitted free after December 31, 1902. There is now in the several warehouses of the United States a very large amount of tea imported under the impression that it could be warehoused and withdrawn free after the 31st of December, 1902. It does not lie with this Department to question the correctness of the decision quoted, and it must therefore collect duty according to the terms of the statute now in force.

The question is of so great importance and so many merchants, both wholesale and retail, are interested therein that the Department deems it important to call special attention of Congress thereto, and it recommends a modification of the law, either by amending section 20, above quoted, or by special act allowing the free withdrawal of tea now in warehouse. Unless this is done it probably will be exported and much delay and litigation will ensue, for much of it has been sold to be delivered January 1, 1903, at a price ruinous to wholesale merchants.

Very respectfully,

L. M. SHAW.

HON. SERENO E. PAYNE,
Chairman Ways and Means Committee, House of Representatives.

The case was argued on November 5, 1902, and the decision therein was handed down on December 2, instant.

The importation in this case consisted of sugar, by the steamship Caracas, on April 4, 1899, entered on that day for warehouse under the usual bond, duties unpaid. The goods remained in bonded warehouse until May 6, 1899, when they were withdrawn for consumption and duties then paid by the plaintiffs under protest. The protest claimed that the goods were not dutiable because the treaty of cession with Spain had been ratified before the date of such withdrawal and that at the time of such withdrawal Porto Rico was not a foreign country, and that goods in warehouse were only liable to duty under laws existing at the time of their withdrawal. The amount of duties paid by the plaintiffs and sought to be recovered in this action of the defendant as collector of the port of New York was $1,442.24 with interest.

To the complaint of the plaintiffs in this action I nterposed a demurrer on behalf of the defendant, that the said complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The question of law in the case was whether the goods that were dutiable at the time of their original entry under the laws then existing were made nondutiable by being warehoused under bond and not withdrawn for consumption until after Porto Rico had been ceded to the United States by treaty with Spain.

After hearing argument, Judge Wallace reserved his decision until December 2 instant, when he handed down the following opinion:

"Wallace, circuit judge.

"The demurrer to the complaint presents the question whether, under section 20 of the customs administrative act (act of June 10, 1890, as amended October 1, 1890), the collector of the port of New York was justified in requiring payment of duties upon imported merchandise at the rate and amount to which the goods were subject at the time of their importation and deposit in the bonded warehouse, or whether he was justified only in requiring payment of such duties as they would have been subject to if imported at the date of their withdrawal for consumption. The goods consisted of sugars imported from Porto Rico. They were imported and entered for warehouse and bonded April 4, 1899. The collector liquidated the duties thereon at $1,442.24, and it is to be assumed, in the absence of averments to the contrary, that at the time the goods were subject to duty in that amount.

"Subsequently, and on May 6, 1899, they were withdrawn for consumption, and the collector required payment for the duties as liquidated. The complaint avers that they were not subject or liable to any duty at that date because they were not imported from a foreign country into the United States within the meaning of any valid statute or Executive order of the United States. It is conceded by counsel that this averment means that before the sugars were withdrawn for consumption, the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain having been ratified, the sugars, being importations of Porto Rico, were not dutiable because Porto Rico was no longer a foreign country within the meaning of the tariff acts, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"Section 20 of the customs administrative act provides as follows: 'That any merchandise deposited in bond in any public or private warehouse may be withdrawn for consumption within three years from the date on which they were originally imported on payment of the duties and charges to which it may be subject by law at the time of such withdrawal.'

"It is not disputed that the goods were subject to duty in the amount exacted of the plaintiffs when they were deposited in bond. Being then subject to these duties, they remained so in the absence of any treaty or statute of Congress relieving them from duty. No such treaty or statute is invoked, but the argument is that the section means to allow the withdrawal of dutiable goods upon the payment of such duties as they would have been subject to if they had been imported at the time of the withdrawal. The language of the section does not require such a construction. It requires payment of the duties to which the goods are lawfully subject at the time of the withdrawal. This means the duties which have become an accrued liability. Duties accrue at the date of the importation and entry of merchandise, and on that date a lien attaches to the goods and a debt for the amount accrues from the importer to the Government. Warehousing is a privilege given by statute to which the section relates by which, in lieu of compelling the importer to make immediate payment of his debt, he is permitted to postpone payment until he withdraws the merchandise from the warehouse for consumption. The privilege is not conferred in order that he may thereby escape, by some contingency, the payment of his debt. It does not contemplate giving him an advantage in that regard over other importers who pay their duties upon the entry of their goods.

"Warehoused goods on withdrawal for consumption pay duties at the same rate and amount as provided by law when imported and entered, unless there is some provision of the existing tariff laws, or in subsequent legislation by Congress, providing for the payment of a different rate or amount, and applicable to the goods in warehouse. The United States have never been divested of their right to the duties which accrued when the goods were imported and warehoused, because neither the treaty of peace by any of its provisions, nor any statute passed subsequently to the one imposing the duty, has impaired or affected that right.

"None of the decisions of the Supreme Court cited for the plaintiffs conflict with the conclusions thus reached. The observations in the opinions are to be read as addressed to the facts of the particular case under consideration by the court, and so read contain nothing to sanction the argument for the plaintiffs.

"Judgment is ordered for the defendant."

In repealing the war tax at the last session there was included in that repeal a duty of 10 cents a pound upon tea, which is to take effect by the terms of said repealing act on the 1st day of January, 1909. Under the practice of the Treasury Department this would have relieved entirely from duty all teas imported and remaining in bonded warehouses and withdrawn after the 1st of January. But under the decision of the court and the change in the policy of the Treasury Department, on account of said decision, such teas would now have to pay the duty of 10 cents a pound, unless such legislation as is proposed in the pending bill shall be enacted by Congress before the 1st of January.

Large quantities, and the committee is informed whole cargoes, of teas have been put in bonded warehouses since the passage of the repealing act, ready to be shipped after the 1st of January to supply the trade of the country. Wholesale and retail dealers, relying upon the construction heretofore placed upon section 20 by the Department, have run their stocks down to a very low point and must replenish them. It would seem that quantities of these teas have been sold in bond, so that the loss would affect not so much the importers as the wholesale and retail dealers in teas, as is evidenced by the following telegram received by the chairman of the committee, viz:

NEW YORK, December 9, 1902.

SERENO E. PAYNE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Secretary of Treasury Shaw's late decision regarding duty to be collected upon teas in bond most serious matter, and would be disastrous to the tea and grocery trade in this country, who have purchased teas at 5 and 7 cents per pound advance over previous year, and would now be compelled to pay 10 cents additional. Importers have largely protected themselves by selling in bond, but merchants through the country have agreed to deliver teas free after January 1.

CARTER, MACY & CO.

New teas will be coming in early in the year, and without change in the existing law unequal burdens would be thrown upon the trade.

The bill simply endeavors to conform the language of the section to the primary meaning and intent of the law and to accord with the custom and ruling of the Treasury Department. There is no reason why any merchandise imported and placed in bonded warehouses should pay a higher or different rate of duty than that imposed upon like merchandise imported at the time of the withdrawal of the former, as both enter the market under the same circumstances and conditions of trade. The contrary rule would be liable at any time, in case of a change in tariff rates, to be a disturbing factor and result in great loss.

The bill should be put upon its passage at the earliest opportunity in order that the intention of Congress both in the repeal of this war duty and in originally enacting what is known as the customs administrative act may have their intended effect.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

REFUND OF CERTAIN CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Mr. PAYNE. I now call up the bill (H. R 15155) to refund the amount of duties paid on merchandise brought into the United States from Porto Rico between April 11, 1899, and May 1, 1900, and also on merchandise brought into the United States from the Philippine Islands between April 11, 1899, and March 8, 1902, and for other purposes, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority be, and the same is hereby, given the Secretary of the Treasury to refund and repay from the appropriation "To repay to importers the excess of deposits for unascertained duties, or duties or other moneys paid under protest," made by section 3689 of the Revised Statutes, moneys paid to the United States without protest as duties and as fines on merchandise brought into the United States from Porto Rico between April 11, 1899, when the ratifications of the treaty of peace of December 10, 1898, with Spain were exchanged, and May 1, 1900, when the act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, went into effect, and also on merchandise brought into the United States from the Philippine Islands between April 11, 1899, and March 8, 1902, the date of the passage of "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes."

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

On page 2, line 14, after the word "purposes," insert, "Provided, That such claims shall be presented under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe and within one year from the date of the passage of this act."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Ways and Means at the last session of Congress, but there was not time in the closing hours of the House to consider it. These duties were collected between the 11th of April, the time of the ratification of the Paris treaty, and the time of the passage of the act enforcing 15 per cent of duties upon goods coming from Porto Rico to the United States, and also from the 11th of April and the time of the passage of the act imposing 75 per cent of the Dingley rates upon goods coming from the Philippine Islands.

Much of those duties were paid under protest, and the parties were in position to bring an action against the collector and recover the duties back, with interest upon the amount paid. The House will remember that the Committee on the Judiciary reported a bill at the last Congress to pay back these duties which had been imposed and were paid under protest, but it did not cover the duties that were paid without protest. Nearly the entire amount was paid under protest, and in that case the parties were allowed to go to the Court of Claims. The statute of limitations was taken out of the way, and they were permitted to recover the amount of duty paid under protest, with interest from the time of payment. That took care of that part of these duties, but, as I say, a small amount, the Secretary of the Treasury says in his letter, amounting to nearly $38,000, was paid on goods imported from these different islands during these periods into the United States and no protest was made.

Of course there can be no refund of these duties unless legislation is passed. This bill simply provides for the refund of these duties, and the amendment that it should be done under the rules and regulations made by the Treasury Department. That is all there is in this bill, and unless some one desires to debate it, I ask that the amendment be reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report both bills to the House as amended with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15794) to amend section 20 of an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved July 10, 1890, and the bill (H. R. 15155) to refund the amount of duties paid on merchandise brought into the United States from Porto Rico between April 11, 1899, and May 1, 1900, and also on merchandise brought into the United States from the Philippine Islands between April 11, 1899, and March 8, 1902, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bills do pass.

AMENDMENT TO CUSTOMS ADMINISTRATIVE ACT.

The first business was the bill (H. R. 15794) to amend section 20 of an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved July 10, 1890.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the title recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

REFUND OF CERTAIN CUSTOMS DUTIES.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 15155) to refund the amount of duties paid on merchandise brought into the United States from Porto Rico between April 11, 1899, and May 1, 1900, and also on merchandise brought into the United States from the Philippine Islands between April 11, 1899, and March 8, 1902, and for other purposes.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the above two bills were passed was laid on the table.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House resolution 340, relating to the distribution of the President's message, with Mr. LACEY in the chair.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress at the present session as relates to the revenue, the bonded debt of the United States, and the treaties affecting the revenue be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

That so much as relates to the foreign affairs, the consular and diplomatic service, including appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

That so much as relates to the appropriations of the public revenue for support of the Government as herein provided, namely, for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications and coast defenses; for pensions; for the District of Columbia, and for all deficiencies, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

That so much as relates to the judiciary of the United States, to the administration of justice, to the punishment and prevention of crime and the organization of courts be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

That so much as relates to banks and banking and the currency be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

That so much as relates to the mints of the United States and to the coinage of gold and silver bullion be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

That so much as relates to the commerce of the United States, domestic and foreign, except so far as it affects the revenue, to intercolonial railways and cables, and the Isthmian Canal, be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

That so much as relates to agriculture and appropriations therefor and to forestry be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

That so much as relates to the merchant marine and fisheries be referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

That so much as relates to the military establishment and appropriations therefor be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

That so much as relates to the naval establishment and to the construction of additional vessels for the Navy, and appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

That so much as relates to the post-office and post-roads and to the carrying of the foreign mails, and appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

That so much as relates to the public domain be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

That so much as relates to the relations of the United States to the Indian tribes and appropriations therefor be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

That so much as relates to the Territories, Alaska, and the Hawaiian Islands be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

That so much as relates to the islands which came to the United States through the treaty of 1899 with Spain, and to Cuba (except so much as relates to the revenue and the appropriations), be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

That so much as relates to the irrigation of arid lands be referred to the Committee on the Irrigation of Arid Lands.

That so much as relates to labor be referred to the Committee on Labor.

That so much as relates to the militia of the several States be referred to the Committee on Militia.

That so much as relates to the civil service be referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

That so much as relates to foreign immigration be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

That so much as relates to printing be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing, on the part of the House.

That so much as relates to the affairs of the District of Columbia (excepting appropriations) be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this is the usual resolution distributing the President's message. It is identical in language with that passed a year ago, except that there were two or three subjects in the last message that are not considered in this, and that part is left out. Otherwise the two resolutions are identical.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] desires to address the committee, and I reserve my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] is recognized.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, the President in his message says:

Organized capital and organized labor alike should remember that in the long run the interest of each must be brought into harmony with the interest of the general public.

This declaration involves the question of the true relation of labor to capital.

Of all the baneful influences which lead to national decay, the most pernicious is a policy that degrades or impoverishes labor. The real strength of a nation consists not alone in fleets and armies, but in the manly spirit of an independent yeomanry and in the intelligence, comfort, and happiness of its laboring people.

Of all industrial questions, the one that most directly affects the general welfare is the relation of American labor to capital. In the prosecution of business of any magnitude three things are necessary—capital, supervision, and labor. For success, wise supervision is quite as important as either. Without capital and wise supervision it would be impossible for labor alone to accomplish any great result. Yet labor, whether of brain or muscle, is entitled to receive out of the accumulations of wealth in proportion to what it contributes toward the accumulation. While this theory is just, the difficulty in reducing it to practice is to devise a satisfactory method by which it could be done.

Copartnerships in all cases are based on the principle that whoever shares in net profits must in the same proportion be responsible for losses. But profit or loss in a business can not be ascertained until after the expiration of a period in the business. Yet labor must be paid in current expenses whether there is any net profit or not. Reliable statistics show that a large percentage of all kinds of business ends in bankruptcy, thus sinking the amount of capital invested. In such cases it is clear that labor receives all that it could possibly be entitled to under any theory of profit sharing. As wages are paid in current expenses, and capital takes all risk of losses, some method ought to be provided for the repayment of the capital invested. Even in successful business there would be no additional accumulation of capital until the money already invested should be repaid.

Copartnership between the owner of the capital in any business and its laborers would not be practicable, for the risk of losses and investment of money would all be on one side without investment or responsibility on the other. Incorporation of associations of laborers could not change these conditions. Incorporating individuals or associations without capital would be a mere fiction of law, like John Doe and Richard Roe in legal proceedings. Business can not be prosecuted successfully on mere legal fictions. Therefore corporations or associations for business must be based on actual capital.

To work is a right of every self-supporting, law-abiding person under any form of government, and the highest duty of free government is to protect individuals in this right. To invest money or not to invest is the right of the owner of capital. But whenever it is invested in business or any lawful pursuit it is entitled to the protection of law the same as labor is entitled to protection for its rights.

Law can not create or compel the investment of capital any more than it can compel labor to work outside of penal and charity institutions, but unwise legislation can prevent the investment of capital and may destroy it. Unreasonable demands by labor upon capital, if persisted in, can do the same thing.

Voluntary arbitration of disagreements between employer and employee—well enough in itself—only settles, however, the existing dispute, which may occur again in the same or a different form as often as the old disagreement may have been settled.

Compulsory arbitration between employer and employee would be a usurpation of the inherent rights of both by the lawmaking power. And could it lawfully be done, the tendency would be on one side to prevent the investment of capital, and on the other to a final establishment by law of a system of peonage for all labor. Law can no more compel capital to pay to labor a specified rate of wages than it can compel labor to work at a fixed rate of wages.

But if the proportion that ought to be paid to labor out of the net profits in a business could be ascertained with mathematical exactness it would not be a determination of the real relation of American labor to capital. The great question in this country in addition to that of profit sharing, is to determine how high the wages of labor can go without destroying labor itself.

The higher the wages of labor, and retain the market for its products, the better it is for everybody. To that point in all cases the employer can go. But beyond that point it is an impossibility. For labor can not be paid in the production of an article more than the article itself will sell for in the market. The market price for an article and the wages of labor in its production are not fixed by this country alone.

In respect to both market price and wages, this country is in competition with the markets and the labor of the world. A wise adjustment of tariff duties on the importations of the products of foreign labor can, to a certain extent, prevent the reduction of prices in this country to a point ruinous to labor. But the wages of labor can reach a point so high as to be beyond the power of tariff duties to overcome the competition of the poorly paid labor of the world. Free trade with the nations would give to labor everywhere the lowest wages paid anywhere.

In the countries of Europe there are to-day 20,000,000 or more of laborers and artisans producing articles for human consumption, and their daily wages are greatly less than those paid to labor in this country in like employments. It would cost any one of these laborers or artisans to remove from his home in the Old World to one in the New not to exceed $50 or $60. For every such person who should come there would be room for one less American laborer, provided there is American labor enough to supply the demand for labor.

The great attraction heretofore for emigration to this country has been that it is the land of liberty, home for the oppressed, and asylum of the exile. In addition, make it by undue stimulation the most attractive country for high wages and short hours for a day's work, and how long would it be before our home labor market would be overstocked from these beehives of industry beyond the power of legislation or the capacity of consumption to save American labor from the low wages of the Old World. To determine the point to which the increase of wages in this country can go and not produce such a result is the real solution of the problem of American wages.

The employee is entitled in all cases to a fair compensation for the time he uses his brain or muscle or both for the benefit of another. The time thus consumed and paid for belongs to the employer, and he has the right to direct the mode and manner of its use; the time not paid for belongs to the employee to do with it within legal limits as he pleases, and the employer has no more right to say how it shall be spent than has the employee to say to the employer whom he shall hire or how he shall conduct his business.

The right of the employer to control the time or the acts of the employee ends where payment ends. These are the relative rights of employer and employee and they can not be violated by either without injury to both. Either has the right to organize for the purpose of improving their condition or prospects in life. But no voluntary organization or association has any greater power or rights than the individuals composing it. Any attempt to exercise any greater power or rights than those possessed by the individual becomes an organized attack upon society itself, which, in self-defense, if there was no other reason, orderly governments must repel and prevent if they would preserve their own existence. [Applause.]

Labor, whether of brain or muscle, has two indefeasible rights, both entitled to full absolute protection under any form of government. One is to contract for employment on such terms as may be satisfactory; the other to refuse all employment, provided no application is made on the community for personal support. Every person self-supporting and law abiding has a right to work or not to work. This is an individual right which the laws of a free government are bound to protect. But no person has a right to prevent another person who desires to work from doing so. Every person has the right to work without molestation, hindrance, or intimidation of any kind. The rights of one man end where the rights of another begin. [Applause.]

In free government there is no right in any citizen to combine for the injury of the general welfare, whether capitalist or day laborer. In this respect law applies alike to both. The primary object in the establishment and maintenance of free government is the general welfare, and in its administration that is paramount to all else. While all have the right to work or not, no one has the right to prevent, or attempt to prevent, by word, act, or deed, the prosecution by others of any lawful pursuit or the development of any industry useful and beneficial to mankind. Nor has anyone a right, by word or deed, to aid or abet in any way persons engaged in obstructing or in hindering the prosecution or development of enterprises and industries calculated to promote the general welfare.

Boycotting, as it is called, in any business rests on the assumption that nobody has any rights except the boycotter, and that he is privileged to fix the terms on which labor may earn its daily bread by its daily toil, and the conditions on which all business in a community must be conducted. The fundamental principle upon which free governments rest, and without which they can not exist, is the protection of the inalienable right of every person to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. [Applause.]

The inalienable right of life and liberty is of little consequence without the inalienable right of the pursuit of happiness. The pursuit of happiness includes the right in the individual to pursue any legal employment in a lawful way without hindrance, molestation, or intimidation in any form. Laws in just governments are made for the protection of these fundamental rights, and whoever violates them or attempts to is subverting the spirit and genius of free institutions. Whoever prevents or attempts to prevent the development of an industry beneficial to mankind, or prevents or attempts to prevent the prosecution of such industry by others, becomes a conspirator against the general welfare just the same as a combination of capitalists might become injurious to the general welfare in their combinations.

A disagreement between the employer and the employee as to the wages of labor is no more a war between capital and labor than is a disagreement between the merchant and his customer as to the price of articles offered for sale a war between the producer and the consumer.

There can be no war or even conflict between capital and labor when their real interests are rightly understood and fully appreciated. They are mutually dependent on each other, and neither can accomplish any great results without the other. Of what use is labor beyond the supplying of mere physical wants by the cultivation of the soil without capital to furnish transportation to market for the products of labor as well as for the development of all industries? And of what use would capital be without labor? In the world's commerce the locomotive is of no use without cars filled with the products of labor, and such cars would be of no use without capital to build the railroad and buy the locomotive.

In the old system of mining in Mexico the peon dug the ore deep down in the earth, filled a sack of rawhide with the material, and throwing the sack over his shoulder, with a leather strap across his forehead to hold the sack, while he used his hands in climbing a single upright pole with notches cut into it like stairs for his feet. On reaching the top he emptied the sack of ore into larger ones suspended on either side of a donkey, and the donkey transported them along a zigzag path down the mountain side to a smelting furnace erected on the bank of the nearest stream of water.

Capital drives a tunnel through the mountain, lays an iron or steel track, and puts upon it a locomotive and cars, into which the peon loads the ore as he digs it, and in as many minutes as it took hours before the ore is transported to the furnace, and the peon is transformed from a drudge, doing the work of a beast of burden, into a man, with wages sufficient to make a home comfortable. Instead of the hovel of the peon, side by side with the stable of the donkey, there springs up comfortable dwellings, homes of happy childhood. So in all the pursuits of life, in order to accomplish the best results for the individual happiness of all, capital and labor must go hand in hand, mutually dependent on each other, and each respecting the rights of the other. [Applause.]

All manual laborers can not be equally successful any more than can all professional or business men. There is no possible way by which incapacity or improvidence can be made equally successful with capacity, prudence, and economy in the struggles of life. If this inborn inequality of capacity in individuals be an evil, it must be charged as a fault in the wisdom of creation.

Whoever is contented with sufficient means for making himself and those dependent upon him comfortable has attained all there is of real happiness in the accumulation of wealth and has therefore no reason to complain of his lot. All can not be poets, painters, or sculptors any more than all can be lawyers, doctors, or merchants, or tradesmen of any kind. Yet in this country every business pursuit or calling is within the reach of all. The highways to honorable distinction lead from the lowly cot of honest industry the same as from the gilded palaces of wealth or the halls of learning, and they are all open alike to the humblest child of the sons of toil, from whom have sprung most of the historic characters of our country and in which the passing generation has not been deficient. [Applause.]

The great soldier who sleeps on the banks of the Hudson, and who will through all time hold a foremost rank with the great captains who have led mighty armies over victorious battlefields, began life as a day laborer in a tanyard.

Our first martyr President was born in abject poverty, and to his mature manhood earned his daily bread by his daily toil. Yet of all the world's civic rulers in peace or war, he will forever hold no inferior niche in the pantheon of human greatness. [Applause.] His two martyred successors, each without wealth or family influences, achieved honorable distinction in all the pathways of life, and won the highest honors in the gift of a free people. In all the great enterprises of this generation, as well as of preceding ones, the individuals who have achieved the greatest success in the world's estimation have, in most cases, commenced active life with the smallest of pecuniary means.

The grievances of labor in free elective governments like ours are to be removed in the same way as any other grievance is removed, by an appeal to the intelligent judgment of public opinion. In free elective governments, with free speech, free press, and universal ballot, there can be no excuse for a resort to lawless violence for the correction of any grievance. In such governments obedience to the commands of law and the mandates of duly organized courts is paramount to all else.

No matter what the grievance complained of may be, a resort to lawless violence is an attack on the rights of every law-abiding citizen and upon organized society itself, and if successful it would be the first step in the road that leads to anarchy and national ruin. An enlightened public opinion in a free government will in the end correct all real grievances, if peaceable means only are employed. It may require time and patience. But that is the case with all attempts to remove long-standing abuses or to establish improved conditions.

No cause, great or small, was ever yet benefited by the violation of fundamental principles of right. God rules the universe by immutable laws of justice, and it is in vain for man to attempt to nullify them. One person's rights end where another's begin is a fundamental principle of all just laws and is the basis of civilized society. Liberty is the right of every person to engage in any lawful pursuit for a livelihood, and to continue therein without hindrance or molestation by any other person. And it is despotism in its worst form that deprives him of this right, a crime against humanity scarcely less than the taking of life itself. Shylock said to the judge, whose sentence of confiscation spared to him only his house and his life:

> You take my house, when you do take the prop
> That doth sustain my house; you take my life,
> When you do take the means whereby I live.

The discontents and complaints of indviduals in this country as to their lot in life spring in most cases from a mistaken notion as to life's most desirable aims and ends. No matter what the condition may be, there is more or less uneasy longing for something different. And when that something is reached or obtained the longing is not satisfied and there is still something a little ahead, almost within reach. Like the child who hastens toward the place where the rainbow seems to touch the earth, no matter how near he approaches the apparent spot, the distance still remains the same.

Most of man's discontents in life, whatever may be his pursuit, is either from impatience or for a longing for something which, if attained, would add little or nothing to his real happiness.

> We scorn to wait for the thing worth having;
> We want high noon at the day's dim dawn;
> We find no pleasure in toiling and saving,
> As our forefathers did in the good times gone.

The man of immense wealth is no happier than the man with moderate means, provided each is equally contented with his lot. Comfort and contentment are the two essentials for happiness in this world's pilgrimage, and whoever possesses them has no occasion to envy any other condition in life. Riches are not necessary to man's enjoyment, but the means to prevent starvation are. Nor is a splendid palace essential to his real happiness, but a shelter against the storm and the winter's blast is.

These indispensable requisites to man's comfort can be secured only by labor. Divine wisdom in the economy of creation made labor a necessity for human existence, and also made health and happiness dependent upon it. Labor, therefore, is not an evil to be shunned, but is the means for the attainment of the most desirable ends and aims in life. [Applause.] "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" was not a malediction against the race, but was a statement of the condition on which man could still be happy in his fallen state. All labor useful to man is equally honorable and is entitled to public consideration, and in all cases is entitled to something more than mere living wages.

If the foregoing views as to the rights of labor and the relation of American labor to capital are correct, then it is important that some feasible plan mutually satisfactory to employer and employee should be adopted for profit sharing by labor. It is obvious that as a business proposition it would be wholly impracticable to make the laborers employed in any business stockholders of the association or corporation. But it could be a part of the contract of employment that all persons employed by the association or corporation should be paid out of net profits, at stipulated periods, on the amount of wages or salary received for such period. the same percentage as shall be paid for such period to any stockholder on a like amount in stock.

Such a plan or something like it would remove the complaint made that labor does not receive a fair share in the accumulation of wealth. Labor contributes no part of the money capital invested and takes no risk of losses; yet it would be paid out of net profits the same percentage on every dollar of wages received as would be paid to any stockholder on a dollar in stock. Some such plan would seem to give to labor its full proportion of the net profits of the business in which it might have been employed. It certainly is entitled to share in net profits at some rate of percentage, if not the same that may be declared on capital stock.

Such a method, or any other mutually satisfactory to employer and employee that would avoid labor strikes, would save for general distribution a vast amount of money now wasted in such strikes, saying nothing of the enormous losses to the whole community in all branches of business or of the sacrifice of human life by lawless violence in such strikes. It has been estimated that the losses in the late anthracite coal strike in the State of Pennsylvania were over two hundred millions of dollars. The following statement by items shows an estimate of $197,390,000:

Strike began May 12, 1902, duration, days	154
Miners and others thrown out of work	183,500
Details of the total losses by reason of the strike.
Loss in miners' wages	$29,350,000
Loss of operators	68,800,000
Loss of merchants in mining towns	22,750,000
Loss of mills and factories closed	7,520,000
Loss of merchants outside district	16,000,000
Loss of railways	34,000,000
Loss of business permanently	8,000,000
Cost of troops in field	1,850,000
Cost of coal and iron police	3,500,000
Loss to railway men in wages	275,000
Cost of maintaining idle men	545,000
Damage to mines and machinery	5,000,000
Total	197,390,000
